Verse 14. Greet one another with a kiss of charity] See the Notes on Rom. xvi. 16. and on 1 Cor. xvi. 20. In the above places the kiss is called a holy kiss; here, φιληματι αγαπης, a kiss of LOVE; i. e. as a mark of their love to each other, in order that misunderstandings might be prevented. But ten or twelve MSS. with the Syriac, Arabic, Armenian, and Vulgate, have αγιῳ, holy; salute one another with a HOLY kiss. The difference is not great.

As the true church of Christ has generally been in a state of suffering, the Epistles of St. Peter have ever been most highly prized by all believers. That which we have just finished is an admirable letter, containing some of the most important maxims and consolations for the church in the wilderness. No Christian can read it without deriving from it both light and life. Ministers, especially, should study it well, that they may know how to comfort their flocks when in persecution or adversity. He never speaks to good effect in any spiritual case who is not furnished out of the Divine treasury. God's words invite, solicit, and command assent: on them a man may confidently rely. The words of man may be true, but they are not infallible. This is the character of God's word alone.

I shall sum up the contents of this chapter in the words of a good commentator: "Because the knowledge and good behaviour of the people depend, in a great measure, upon the kind of instruction which they receive from their teachers; the apostle, in this chapter, addressed the elders, that is, the bishops, pastors, rulers, and deacons, among the brethren of Pontus, &c. ver. 1. exhorting the bishops in particular, to feed the flock of God committed to their care faithfully; and to exercise their episcopal office, not as by constraint, but willingly; not from the love of gain, but from love to their Master and to the flock, ver. 2.; and not to lord it over God's heritage, but to be patterns of humility and disinterestedness to the people, ver. 3. This exhortation to bishops, to feed Christ's flock, was given with much propriety by Peter, who had himself been appointed by Christ to feed His lambs and His sheep. Next, because the faithful performance of the bishop's office was, in that age, attended with great difficulty and danger, the apostle, to encourage the bishops, assured them that when the chief Shepherd shall appear, they shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away, ver. 4. The distinguished reward which Christ is to bestow on those who have suffered for His sake, being a favourite topic with our apostle, he introduces it often in this Epistle.

"Having thus exhorted the pastors, the apostle turned his discourse to the people, charging them to be subject to their elders, and to one another; that is, to be of a teachable disposition, and to receive instruction from every one capable of giving it; and to do all the duties which they could to each other, according to their different stations and relations, ver. 5. But especially to be subject to God, by humbly submitting themselves to the judgments which were coming upon them, that God might exalt them in due time, ver. 6. Casting all their anxious care on God, because He cared for them, ver. 7. And to watch against the devil, who went about as a roaring lion, seeking to destroy them, by instigating the wicked to persecute them, and drive them into apostacy, ver. 8. But they were to resist that terrible enemy by steadfastness in the faith; and not to think themselves hardly dealt with when persecuted, knowing that their brethren, every where, were exposed to the same temptations of the devil, ver. 9. In the meantime, to give them all the assistance in his power, the apostle prayed earnestly to God to stablish and strengthen them, ver. 10. And ended his prayer with a doxology to God, expressive of His supreme dominion over the universe, and all the things it contains.

END OF THE NOTES ON THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PETER.

INTRODUCTION

PETER.

As the Preface to the preceding Epistle embraces the question of the authenticity of both Epistles, and also considers several matters common to both, I need not take up the subject here afresh; but simply consider those matters which are peculiar to the Epistle before me, and which have not been examined in the foregoing Preface.

"This Epistle, as appears from chap. iii. 1. (says Michaelis,) was written to the same communities as the First Epistle; and the author gives us thus to understand, that he was the person who wrote the First Epistle; that is, the apostle Peter. He calls himself likewise, chap i. 1. Συμεων Πετρος, δουλος και αποστολος Ιησυ Χριστυ, Symeon Peter, a servant and apostle of Jesus Christ; and chap. i. 16—18. says, that he was present at the transfiguration of Christ on the mount. The notion, therefore, entertained by Grotius, that this Epistle was written by a bishop of Jerusalem, of the name of Simeon, is absolutely inadmissible; and we have no other alternative than this, either it was written by the apostle St. Peter, or it is a forgery in his name.

" The ancients entertained very great doubts whether St. Peter was really the author. Eusebius, in his chapter, where he speaks of the Books of the New Testament in general, reckons it among the αντιλεγομενα, those not canonical. He says, that tradition does not reckon, as a part of the New Testament, the Second Epistle ascribed to Peter; but that, as in the opinion of most men, it is useful, it is therefore much read. Origen had said, long before, that Peter had left behind him one Epistle universally received, and perhaps a second, though doubts are entertained about it.

" The old Syriac Version, though it contains the Epistle of St. James, which Eusebius likewise reckons among the αντιλεγομενα, does not contain the second Epistle of St. Peter. Now it cannot be said that the other books of the New Testament were translated into Syriac before St. Peter's Second Epistle was written; for St. Paul's Second Epistle to Timothy was written certainly as late, and yet is contained in this very Version. And if an Epistle, addressed only to an individual, was known to the Syriac translator, it may be thought that a circular epistle, addressed to communities dispersed in several countries in Asia, would hardly have escaped his notice. The circumstance, therefore, that the old Syriac translator did not translate the second Epistle of St. Peter, as well as the First, may be used as an argument against its antiquity, and of course against its authenticity.

"It appears, then, that if the authenticity of this Epistle were to be determined by external evidence, it would have less in its favour than it would have against it. But, on the other hand, the internal evidence is greatly in its favour; and, indeed so much so, that the Epistle gains in this respect more than it loses in the former. Wetstein, indeed, says that, since the ancients themselves were in doubt, the moderns cannot expect to arrive at certainty, because we cannot obtain more information on the subject in the eighteenth, than ecclesiastical writers were able to obtain in the third and fourth centuries. Now this is perfectly true, as far as relates to historical knowledge, or to the testimony of others in regard to the matter of fact, whether St. Peter was the author or not. But when this question is to be decided by an examination of the Epistle itself, it is surely possible that the critical skill and penetration of the moderns may discover in it proofs of its having been written by St. Peter, though these proofs escaped the notice of the ancients. After a diligent comparison of the First Epistle of St. Peter, with that which is ascribed to him as his Second, the agreement between them appears to me to be such, that if the Second was not written by St. Peter, as well as the First, the person who forged it not only possessed the power of imitation in a very unusual degree; but understood likewise the design of the First Epistle, with which the ancients do not appear to have been acquainted. Now, if this be true, the supposition that the Second Epistle was not written by St. Peter himself, involves a contradiction. Nor is it credible that a pious impostor of the first or second century should have imitated St. Peter so successfully as to betray no marks of a forgery; for the spurious productions of those ages, which were sent into the world in the name of apostles are, for the most part, very unhappy imitations, and discover very evident marks that they were not written by the persons to whom they were ascribed. Other productions of this kind betray their origin by the poverty of their materials, or by the circumstance that, instead of containing original thoughts, they are nothing more than a rhapsody of sentiments collected from various parts of the Bible, and put together without plan or order.

"This charge cannot possibly be laid to the Second Epistle of St. Peter, which is so far from containing materials derived from other parts of the Bible, that the third chapter exhibits the discussion of a totally new subject. Its resemblance to the Epistle of Jude will hardly be urged as an argument against it; for no doubt can be made that the Second Epistle of St. Peter was, in respect to the Epistle of St. Jude, the original, and not the copy. Lastly, it is extremely difficult, even for a man of the greatest talents, to forge a writing in the name of another, without sometimes inserting what the pretended author either would not, or could not, have said; and support the imposture in so complete a manner as to militate, in not a single instance, either against his character, or against the age in which he lived. Now, in the Second Epistle of St. Peter, though it has been a subject of examination full seventeen hundred years, nothing has hitherto been discovered which is unsuitable either to the apostle, or to the apostolic age. Objections, indeed, have been made on account of its style: but the style of the Second Epistle, when compared with that of the First, warrants rather the conclusion that both were written by the same person. We have no reason, therefore, to believe that the Second Epistle of St. Peter is therefore spurious, especially as it is difficult to comprehend what motive could have induced a Christian, whether orthodox or heretic, to attempt the fabrication of such an Epistle, and then falsely ascribe it to St. Peter.

"Having shown that the supposition that this Epistle is spurious, is without foundation; I have, in the next place, to show that there are positive grounds for believing it to be genuine. The arguments in favour of its genuineness are of two kinds, being founded on the similarity of the two Epistles, either in respect to their materials, or in respect to their style. The arguments of the former kind are as follow:—

"1. The design of the First Epistle was to assure the uncircumcised Christians that they stood in the grace of God. Now it was not generally known that this was the design of it; and therefore we cannot suppose that any person, whose object was to forge an Epistle in St. Peter's name should have observed it. But the design of the Second Epistle was certainly the same as that of the First, as appears from the address, chap. i. 1. Τοις ισοτιμον ημιν λαχουσι πιστιν εν δικαιοσυνη τ̃ Θεου, to them who have obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteousness of God. If we explain ημιν, as denoting "us apostles," the address will imply what was wholly unnecessary, since no one could doubt that the faith of other Christians might be as good as the faith of the apostles; and it will sound likewise rather haughty and assuming: but if we explain ημιν as denoting "us who were born Jews," and consider that the Second Epistle, as well as the First, was directed to persons who were born Heathens, the address becomes clear and consistent: δικαιοσυνη τ̃ Θεου, will then signify the impartiality of God, in estimating the faith of native Heathens as highly as the faith of native Jews, which St. Peter has extolled in other places. We shall likewise be able to explain chap. i. 8—10. which appears to contain the tautology that those who are diligent in good works are not idle; whereas, if this Epistle be explained from the design of the First, we shall perceive the meaning of the passage to be this; that they who are diligent in good works, need not fear the reproach that they observe not the Levitical law, since their good works, which are the fruit of their religious knowledge, will be the means of making their calling and election sure.—See the Note on this place.

"The deluge, which is not a common subject in the apostolic epistles, is mentioned both in 1 Pet. iii. 20. and in 2 Pet. ii. 5. and in both places the circumstance is noted, that eight persons only were saved; though in neither place does the subject require that the number should be particularly specified. Now it is true, that St. Peter was not the only apostle who knew how many persons were saved in the ark; but he only, who by habit had acquired a familiarity with the subject, would ascertain the precise number, where his argument did not depend upon it. The author of the First Epistle had read St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans; and the author of the Second Epistle speaks in express terms, chap. iii. 15, 16. of the Epistles of St. Paul. Now, no other writer of the New Testament has quoted from the New Testament; consequently, we have in these Epistles a criterion from which we may judge that they were written by the same author.

"Before I consider the arguments which are derived from the style of these Epistles, I must observe, that several commentators have, on the contrary, contended, that the style is very different; and since have inferred that they were written by different authors: but it is extremely difficult to form, from a single Epistle, so complete a judgment of the author's style and manner, as to enable us to pronounce, with certainty, that he was not the author of another Epistle ascribed to him. The style of the same writer is not always the same at every period of his life; especially when he composes, not in his native, but in a foreign, language.

"From what has been said in the course of this section, it appears, that even the second chapter of the Second Epistle has some resemblance, both in its style and contents, to the First Epistle. This is to be particularly noted, because even the advocates for the Second Epistle have in general granted that the style of this chapter is not the usual style of St. Peter. Bishop Shirlock, for instance, acknowledges it: nor, though I contend that there is some similarity, as in ver. 5—7. will I assert, that there is no difference. But it will not therefore follow, that the whole Epistle was not written by St. Peter: and if it is allowable to draw a conclusion from one or two passages, it will be no other than this, that the second chapter is spurious, because the style of it is said to be as different from the first and third chapters as it is from the First Epistle. This conclusion, however, no one will draw who has examined the connexion of the whole Epistle: in fact, the difference in question is rather of a negative kind; for, though I am unable to discover any remarkable agreement in style, between the First Epistle and the second chapter of the Second Epistle, I do not perceive any remarkable difference. This second chapter has indeed several words which are unusual in other parts of the New Testament; but the same may be said of the First Epistle; and some of the expressions, which to us appear extraordinary, were borrowed perhaps from the Gnostics, whose doctrines are here confuted; for it is not unusual, in combating the opinions of a particular sect, to adopt their peculiar terms. Thus, in 2 Pet. ii. 17. the Gnostics are called 'clouds, agitated by a tempest;' and we know that the Manicheans, who had many doctrines in common with the Gnostics, taught that there were five good and five bad elements, and that one of the latter was called 'tempest.' In like manner they frequently speak of darkness, under the name of ζοφος, which occurs more than once in this chapter. The Epistle of St. Jude has a still greater number of unusual figurative expressions; and it is not impossible that these also were borrowed from the Gnostics. The Second Epistle of St. Peter must have been written only a short time before his death; for he says, chap. i. 14. 'shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me.' St. Peter here alludes to his conversation with Christ, after the resurrection recorded in John xxi. 18—22. where Christ had foretold his death in the following manner:—'When thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not.' Hence St. Peter might very easily conclude, that he would not survive the coming of Christ to judge Jerusalem. But Christ has declared that Jerusalem would be destroyed before one generation passed away. St. Peter, therefore, after a lapse of thirty years, that is, in the year 64, necessarily considered his death as an event not far distant. As to the design of this Epistle, it appears that St. Peter wrote against certain persons, who, though members of the church, denied the doctrine of a general judgment, and a dissolution of the world. They inferred that this event, because it had been long delayed, would never take place: to which objection St. Peter replies by saying—That one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day: that the Lord is not slack concerning His promise, as some men count slackness, but is long-suffering, not willing that any man should perish, but that all should come to repentance. Further, St. Peter argues, that as the earth has already undergone a great revolution at the deluge, another revolution, equally great, is not incredible: and that since the former event was, at the time when it happened, as unexpected as the latter will be, we ought to believe in God's declaration, that the world will one day be totally destroyed. This destruction, St. Peter says, will be effected, not by water as at the deluge, but by fire. 'The elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up.' Now, a general conflagration will be more easily admitted by those who are unacquainted with the state of the earth, than an universal deluge: for though it may be difficult to comprehend whence a sufficient quantity of water could be brought to cover the whole earth, yet no one can deny that the bowels of the earth abound with inflammable matter, and that fiery eruptions may spread themselves throughout the surface of the globe.—See the Notes on chap. iii. 9—11.

"It must be observed, that St. Peter's appeal to the deluge, in the time of Noah, implies that the adversaries, whom he combats, admitted that the Mosaic account of it was true, since it would have been useless to have argued from a fact which they denied. This must be kept in view, because it will assist us in determining who these adversaries were.

"St. Peter describes these false teachers, chap. ii. 10, 11, 12, as calumniators of the angels; which the apostle highly censures, even though the calumny should be directed against the fallen angels; since some respect is due to their former greatness and power. St. Peter says, angels themselves, which are greater in power and might, bring not railing accusation against them before the Lord: but these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things which they understand not. Here we have a description of these false teachers, which points them out more distinctly than any of the preceding accounts, and shows they were Gnostics. For the ecclesiastical history furnishes many examples of improper adoration paid to the angels. I know of no sect which calumniated them, except that of the Gnostics. Now, the Gnostics calumniated the angels by their doctrine in respect to the creation of the world. They raised certain angels to the rank of creators; but described the creation as very imperfect, and the authors of it as wicked and rebellious against the Supreme Being.

"Having thus shown that St. Peter, in his Second Epistle, combats the opinion of a Gnostic sect, I will now venture to go a step further, and attempt to determine the name which the orthodox gave to this particular sect, in the first century. St. Peter describes them, chap. ii. 15. as following the way of Balaam, that is, as following the religious doctrine of Balaam. The doctrine of Balaam, as St. John says, Apoc. ii. 14. was to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication. And since Nicolaus, in Greek, has the same meaning as Balaam in Hebrew, the followers of Balaam are called by St. John, Apoc. ii. 15. Nicolaitans. Now, it is well known, that the Nicolaitans were a sect of the Gnostics: and, therefore, it was probable that this was the sect against which St. Peter wrote. To this opinion it has been objected, that if St. Peter had meant the Nicolaitans, he would have called them, not followers of Balaam, but by their proper name, Nicolaitans; first, because, in general, proper names are retained, and not translated; and, secondly, because, in the present instance, no one before Cocceius observed the analogy between the Hebrew word Balaam, and the Greek word Nicolaus. But neither of these reasons is true. For, to say nothing of the general custom which once prevailed among the literati of Germany, of translating their names into Greek or Latin; I could produce examples of such translations amongst the Jews, of which it will be sufficient to mention that which occurs in Acts ix. 36. And the derivation of the Nicolaitans from Balaam must have been long known, at least in Asia; for, in the Arabic Version published by Erpenius, we find an instance of it in Apoc. ii. 6. where τα εργα των Νικολαιτων, is rendered اعمال الشعوب that is, 'works of the Shuaibites.' Now the Arabic word شعيب (Shuaib) is equivalent to the Hebrew Balaam. Shuaib is mentioned in the Korân (Surat vii. 86. xxvi. 176. and in other places) as the prophet of the Midianites. Some suppose that by Shuaib is meant Jethro: but, in my opinion, no other person is meant but Balaam, who was sent for by the Midianites as well as by the Moabites. At least I cannot comprehend how the Nicolaitans, or any other heretics, could be considered as followers of Jethro. The Arabic verb شعب shaâba, signifies he destroyed, and the noun شعب shaâbon, the people. It is not improbable, therefore, that the Arabs adapted the word شعيب shuaib as corresponding to the Hebrew word בלעם Balaâm, which is compounded of בלע balâ, he swallowed up or destroyed, and עם âm, the people. So Νικολαος Nicolas, is from νικαω to overcome, and λαος the people."—See Michaelis's Introduction.

I shall not attempt to dispute the propriety of these derivations and etymologies: but I must make one remark on the Shuaibites. In general, the Arabic writers say that Shuaib was Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses; and that God had sent him, according to the Korân, to preach pure morality to the Midianites; but I do not remember to have met with a sect of idolaters, or heretics, called Shuaibites. In both the places of the Korân, mentioned above, Shuaib is spoken of with respect. But the conjecture that Shuaib and Balaâm are the same, is exceedingly probable; and this makes the etymology the more likely.

We may safely conclude, from all the evidence before us,—1. That St. Peter, the apostle, was the author of this, as well as of the other Epistle. 2. That it was written to the same persons. 3. That they were in a state of persecution: and had also to contend with Gnostics or other heretics, in the church. 4. That it was written a short time after the First Epistle, and not long before St. Peter's martyrdom; but the precise year cannot be ascertained.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. Simon Peter] Simeon, Συμεων, is the reading of almost all the Versions, and of all the most important MSS. And this is the more remarkable, as the surname of Peter occurs upwards of seventy times in the New Testament, and is invariably read Σιμων, Simon; except here, and in Acts xv. 14. where James gives him the name of Symeon. Of all the Versions, only the Armenian and Vulgate have Simon.

A servant] Employed in his Master's work:—

And an apostle] Commissioned immediately by Jesus Christ Himself, to preach to the Gentiles, and to write these Epistles for the edification of the church. As the writer was an apostle, the Epistle is therefore necessarily canonical. All the MSS. agree in the title apostle; and of the Versions, only the Syriac omits it.

Precious faith] Ισοτιμον πιστιν, valuable faith; faith worth a great price; and faith which cost a great price. The word precious is used in the low religious phraseology, for dear, comfortable, delightful, &c. but how much is the dignity of the subject let down by expressions and meanings more proper for the nursery than for the noble science of salvation. It is necessary, however, to state, that the word precious literally signifies valuable, of great price, costly; and was not used in that low sense in which it is now employed, when our translation was made. That faith must be of infinite value, the grace of which Christ purchased by His blood: and it must be of infinite value also when it is the very instrument by which the soul is saved unto eternal life.

With us] God having given to you, believing Gentiles, the same faith and salvation which he had given to us believing Jews.

Through the righteousness of God] Through His method of bringing a lost world, both Jews and Gentiles, to salvation by Jesus Christ: through His gracious impartiality, providing for Gentiles as well as Jews.—See the Notes on Rom. iii. 21—26.

Of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ] This is not a proper translation of the original του Θεου ημων και σωτηρος Ιησου Χριστου, which is literally, of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ; and this reading, which is indicated in the margin, should have been received in the text: and it is an absolute proof that St. Peter calls Jesus Christ GOD, even in the properest sense of the word, with the article prefixed. It is no evidence against this doctrine that two MSS. of little authority, and the Syriac version, have Κυριου, Lord, instead of Θεου, God, as all other MSS. and Versions agree in the other reading, as well as the Fathers; (the uncertain author of the uncertain work intituled De Vocatione Gentium, excepted.)—See in Griesbach.

Verse 2. Grace] God's favour: peace, the effects of that favour in the communication of spiritual and temporal blessings.

Through the knowledge of God] Εν επιγνωσει, by the acknowledging of God, and of Jesus our Lord. For those who acknowledge Him in all their ways, He will direct their steps. Those who know Christ, and do not acknowledge Him before men, can get no multiplication of grace and peace.

Verse 3. As his divine power] His power, which no power can resist, because it is Divine; that which properly belongs to the infinite Godhead.

Hath given unto us] Δεδωρημενης, hath endowed us with the gifts; or, hath gifted us, as Dr. Macknight translates it; who observes that it refers to the gifts which the Holy Spirit communicated to the apostles, to enable them to bring men to life and godliness: which were—1. A complete knowledge of the doctrines of the gospel. 2. Power to preach and defend their doctrines in suitable language, which their adversaries were not able to gainsay or resist. 3. Wisdom to direct them how to behave in all cases where and when to labour; and the matter suitable to all different cases, and variety of persons. 4. Miraculous powers, so that on all proper and necessary occasions they could work miracles for the confirmation of their doctrines and mission.

By life and godliness we may understand, 1. a godly life; or, 2. eternal life as the end, and godliness the way to it; or, 3. what was essentially necessary for the present life, food, raiment, &c. and what was requisite for the life to come. As they were in a suffering state, and most probably many of them strangers in those places, one can scarcely say that they had all things that pertained to life: and yet so had God worked in their behalf, that none of them perished, either through lack of food or raiment. And as to what was necessary for godliness, they had that from the gospel ministry, which it appears was still continued among them; and the gifts of the Holy Spirit, which were not withdrawn: and what was farther necessary in the way of personal caution, comfort, and instruction, was supplied by means of these two Epistles.

That hath called us to glory and virtue] To virtue or courage, as the means; and glory, the kingdom of heaven, as the end. This is the way in which these words are commonly understood; and this sense is plain enough: but the construction is harsh. Others have translated δια δοξης και αρετης, by His glorious benignity; a Hebraism, for δια της ενδοξου αρετης; and read the whole verse thus, God, by His own power, hath bestowed on us every thing necessary for a happy life and godliness, having called us to the knowledge of Himself, by His own infinite goodness. It is certain that the word αρετη, which we translate virtue or courage, is used 1 Pet. ii. 9, to express the perfection of the Divine nature: that ye may show forth, τας αρετας, the virtues or PERFECTIONS of him who hath called you from darkness into his marvellous light.

But there is a various reading here, which is of considerable importance; and which, from the authorities by which it is supported, appears to be genuine, του καλεσαντος ημας ιδια δοξη και αρετη, through the knowledge of Him who hath called us by His own glory and power; or by His own glorious power. This is the reading of AC. several others; and, in effect, of the Coptic, Armenian, Syriac, Æthiopic, Vulgate, Cyril, Cassiodorus, &c.

Verse 4. Whereby are given unto us] By His own glorious power He hath freely given unto us exceeding great and invaluable promises. The Jews were distinguished in a very particular manner by the promises which they received from God: the promises to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, and the prophets. God promised to be their God to protect, support, and save them; to give them what was emphatically called the Promised Land; and to cause the Messiah to spring from their race. St. Peter intimates to these Gentiles that God had also given unto them exceeding great promises; indeed all that He had given to the Jews, the mere settlement in the Promised Land excepted: but this also He had given in all its spiritual meaning and force. And besides τα μεγιστα επαγγελματα, these superlatively great promises which distinguished the Mosaic dispensation, He had given them τα τιμια επαγγελματα, the valuable promises, those which came through the Great Price; enrolment with the church of God, redemption in and through the blood of the cross, the continual indwelling influence of the Holy Ghost, the resurrection of the body, and eternal rest at the right hand of God. It was of considerable consequence to the comfort of the Gentiles that these promises were made to them; and that salvation was not exclusively of the Jews.

That by these ye might be partakers] The object of all God's promises and dispensations was to bring fallen man back to the image of God, which he had lost. This, indeed, is the sum and substance of the religion of Christ. We have partaken of an earthly, sensual, and devilish nature: the design of God by Christ, is to remove this, and make us partakers of the Divine nature; and save us from all the corruption in principle and fact which is in the world; the source nature, [a] having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

5 And besides this, [b] giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue [c] knowledge;

6 And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness;

A. M. cir. 4064. A. D. cir. 60. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 4. A. U. C. cir. 813.

7 And to godliness brotherly kindness; and [d] to brotherly kindness charity.

8 For if these things be in you, and abound, of which is lust, επιθυμια, irregular, unreasonable, inordinate, and impure desire: desire to have, to do, and to be what God has prohibited; and what would be ruinous and destructive to us were the desire to be granted.

[a] Ch. 2. 18, 20.—[b] Ch. 3. 18.—[c] 1 Pet. 3. 7.

Lust, or irregular, impure desire, is the source whence all the corruption which is in the world springs. Lust conceives and brings forth sin; sin is finished or brought into act, and then brings forth death. This destructive principle is to be rooted out; and love to God and man is to be implanted in its place. This is every Christian's privilege; God has promised to purify our hearts by faith: and that, as sin hath reigned unto death, even so shall grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life: that here, we are to be delivered out of the hands of all our enemies, and have even "the thoughts of our hearts so cleansed by the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit, that we shall perfectly love Him, and worthily magnify His holy name."

This blessing may be expected by those who are continually escaping, αποφυγοντες, flying from, the corruption that is in the world, and in themselves. God purifies no heart in which sin is indulged. Get pardon through the blood of the Lamb; feel your need of being purified in heart; seek that with all your soul; plead the exceeding great and invaluable promises that refer to this point; abhor your inward self; abstain from every appearance of evil; flee from self and sin to God: and the very God of peace will sanctify you through body, soul, and spirit; make you burning and shining lights here below, (a proof that He can save to the uttermost all that come to Him by Christ;) and afterward, having guided you by His counsel through life, will receive you into His eternal glory.

Verse 5. And besides this] Notwithstanding what God hath done for you, in order that ye may not receive the grace of God in vain;—

Giving all diligence] Furnishing all earnestness and activity: the original is very emphatic.

Add to your faith] Επιχορηγησατε, lead up hand in hand; alluding, as most think, to the chorus in the Grecian dance; who danced with joined hands.—See the Note on this word, 2 Cor. ix. 10.

Your faith] That faith in Jesus by which ye have been led to embrace the whole gospel, and by which ye have the evidence of things unseen.

Virtue] Αρετην, courage, or fortitude, to enable you to profess the faith before men, in these times of persecution.

Knowledge] True wisdom, by which your faith will be increased, and your courage directed, and preserved from degenerating into rashness.

Verse 6. Temperance] A proper and limited use of all earthly enjoyments; keeping every sense under proper restraints; and never permitting the animal part to subjugate the rational.

Patience] Bearing all trials and difficulties with an even mind; enduring in all, and persevering through all.

Godliness] Piety towards God; a deep reverential religious fear; not only worshipping God with every becoming outward act, but adoring, loving, and magnifying Him in the heart; a disposition indispensably necessary to salvation, but exceedingly rare among professors.

Verse 7. Brotherly kindness] Φιλαδελφιαν, love of the brotherhood: the strongest attachment to Christ's flock; feeling each as a member of your own body.

Charity] Αγαπην, love to the whole human race; even to your persecutors: love to God and the brethren they had; love to all mankind they must also have. True religion is neither selfish nor insulated; where the love of God is, bigotry cannot exist. Narrow, selfish people, and people of a party, who scarcely have any hope of the salvation of those who do not believe as they believe, and who do not follow with them, have scarcely any religion; though, in their own apprehension, none is so truly orthodox or religious as themselves.

After αγαπην, love, one MS. adds these words, εν δε τη αγαπη την παρακλησιν, and to this love consolation: but this is an idle and useless addition.

Verse 8. For if these things be in you, and abound] If ye possess all these graces, and they increase and abound in your souls; they will make, show you to be neither αργους, idle, nor ακαρπους, unfruitful, in the acknowledgment of our Lord Jesus Christ. The common translation is here very unhappy: barren and unfruitful certainly convey the same idea; but idle or inactive, which is the proper sense of αργους, takes away this tautology, and restores the sense.

A. M. cir. 4064. A. D. cir. 60. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 4. A. U. C. cir. 813.

they make you that ye shall neither be [a] barren [b] nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9 But he that lacketh these things [c] is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was [d] purged from his old sins.

10 Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence [e] to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, [f] ye shall never fall:

[a] Gr. idle.——[b] John 15. 2. Tit. 3. 14.——[c] 1 John 2. 9, 11.

[d] Eph. 5. 26. Heb. 9. 14. 1 John 1. 7.——[e] 1 John 3. 19.——[f] Ch. 3. 17

The graces already mentioned by the apostle, are in themselves active principles: he who was possessed of them, and had them abounding in him, could not be inactive; and he who is not inactive in the way of life, must be fruitful. I may add, that he who is thus active, and consequently fruitful, will ever be ready at all hazard to acknowledge his Lord and Saviour, by whom he has been brought into this state of salvation.

Verse 9. But he that lacketh these things] He, whether Jew or Gentile, who professes to have FAITH in God, and has not added to that FAITH fortitude, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and universal love, is blind; his understanding is darkened, and cannot see afar off; μυωπαζων, shutting his eyes against the light, winking, not able to look truth in the face; nor to behold that God whom he once knew was reconciled to him: and thus it appears he is wilfully blind, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins; has, at last, through his non-improvement of the grace which he received from God, his faith ceasing to work by love, lost the evidence of things not seen; for, having grieved the Holy Spirit, by not showing forth the virtues of Him who called him into His marvellous light, he has lost the testimony of his sonship; and then, darkness and hardness having taken place of light and filial confidence, he first calls all his former experience into doubt, and questions whether he had not put enthusiasm in the place of religion. By these means his darkness and hardness increase, his memory becomes indistinct and confused; till, at length, he forgets the work of God on his soul; next denies it; and, at last, asserts that the knowledge of salvation, by the remission of sins, is impossible; and that no man can be saved from sin in this life. Indeed, some go so far as to deny the Lord that bought them; to renounce Jesus Christ as having made atonement for them; and finish their career of apostacy by utterly denying His Godhead. Many cases of this kind have I known; and they are all the consequence of believers not continuing to be workers together with God, after they had experienced His pardoning love.

Reader, see that the light that is in thee become not darkness; for if it do, how great a darkness!

Verse 10. Wherefore] Seeing the danger of apostacy, and the fearful end of them who obey not the gospel, and thus receive the grace of God in vain; give all diligence, σπουδασατε, hasten, be deeply careful, labour with the most intense purpose of soul:—

To make your calling] From deep Gentile darkness into the marvellous light of the gospel;—

And election] Your being chosen, in consequence of obeying the heavenly calling, to be the people and church of God. Instead of κλησιν, calling, the Codex Alexandrinus has παρακλησιν, consolation.

Sure] Βεβαιαν, firm, solid. For, your calling to believe the gospel, and your election to be members of the church of Christ, will be ultimately unprofitable to you, unless you hold fast what you have received, by adding to your faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, &c.

For if ye do these things] If ye be careful and diligent to work out your own salvation, through the grace which ye have already received from God, ye shall never fall; ου μη πταισητε ποτε, ye shall at no time stumble, or fall, as the Jews have done, and lost their election, Rom. xi. 11. where the same word is used: and as apostates do, and lose their peace and salvation. We find, therefore, that they who do not these things shall fall: and thus we see that there is nothing absolute and unconditional in their election. There is an addition here in some MSS. and Versions which should not pass unnoticed: the Codex Alexandrinus, nine others, with the Syriac, Erpen's Arabic, Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, latter Syriac with an asterisk, the Vulgate, and Bede, have ινα δια των καλων (υμων) εργων, THAT BY (your) GOOD WORKS ye may make your calling and election firm. This clause is found in the edition of Colineus, Paris, 1534; and has been probably omitted by more recent editors, on the supposition that the addition does not make a very orthodox sense. But, on this ground, there need be no alarm; for it does not state that the good works thus required merit either the calling and election, or the eternal glory, of God. He who does not by good works confirm his calling and election, will soon have neither: and although no good works ever did purchase, or ever can purchase, the kingdom of God; yet no soul can ever scripturally expect to see God, who has them not. I was hungry, and ye gave me no meat; thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; go, ye cursed: I was hungry, and ye gave meat, &c. &c. come, ye blessed.

11 For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

12 Wherefore [a] I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, [b] though ye know them, and be established in the present truth.

14 [e] Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me.

15 Moreover I will endeavour that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance.

16 For we have not followed [f] [g] cunningly-de-

[a] Rom. 15. 14, 15. Phil. 3. 1. ch. 3. 1. 1 John 2. 21. Jude 5.—[b] 1 Pet. 5. 12. ch. 3. 17.—[c] 2 Cor. 5. 1, 4.—[d] Ch. 3. 1.

[e] See Deut. 4. 21, 22. & 31. 14. 2 Tim. 4. 6.—[f] John 21. 18, 19.—[g] 1 Cor. 1. 17. & 2. 1, 4. 2 Cor. 2. 17. & 4. 2.

Verse 11. For so an entrance shall be ministered] If ye give diligence, and do not fall, an abundant, free, honourable, and triumphant entrance shall be ministered to you into the everlasting kingdom. There seems to be here an allusion to the triumphs granted by the Romans to their generals, who had distinguished themselves by putting an end to a war, or doing some signal military service to the state.—See the whole account of this military pageant in the Note on 2 Cor. ii. 14. "Ye shall have a triumph, in consequence of having conquered your foes, and led captivity captive."

Instead of everlasting kingdom, αιωνιον βασιλειαν, two MSS. have επουρανιον, heavenly kingdom; and several MSS. omit the word και Σωτηρος, and Saviour.

Verse 12. Wherefore I will not be negligent] He had already written one epistle; this is the second; and probably he meditated more, should he be spared. He plainly saw that there was no way of entering into eternal life, but that which he described from the 5th to the 10th verse; and, although they knew, and were established in the present truth, yet he saw it necessary to bring these things frequently to their recollection.

Verse 13. As long as I am in this tabernacle] By tabernacle, we are to understand His body; and hence several of the Versions have σωματι, body, instead of σκηνωματι, tabernacle. Peter's mode of speaking is very remarkable: as long as I AM in this tabernacle; so then the body was not Peter, but Peter dwelt in that body. Is not this a proof that St. Peter believed his soul to be very distinct from his body? As a man's house is the place where he dwells, so the body is the house where the soul dwells.

Verse 14. Knowing that shortly I must put off] St. Peter plainly refers to the conversation between our Lord and himself, related John xxi. 18, 19. And it is likely that he had now a particular intimation that he was shortly to seal the truth with his blood. But as our Lord told him that his death would take place when he should be old, being aged now, he might, on this ground, fairly suppose that his departure was at hand.

Verse 15. Moreover I will endeavour] And is not this endeavour seen in these two Epistles? By leaving these among them, even after his decease, they had these things always in remembrance.

After my decease] Μετα την εμην εξοδον, after my going out; i. e. of his tabernacle. The real Peter was not open to the eye, nor palpable to the touch; he was concealed in that tabernacle, vulgarly supposed to be Peter. There is a thought very similar to this in the last conversation of Socrates with his friends. As this great man was about to drink the poison to which he was condemned by the Athenian judges, his friend CRITO said, "But how would you be buried?—SOCRATES, Just as you please, if you can but catch me, and I do not elude your pursuit. Then, gently smiling, he said, I cannot persuade Crito, ως εγω ειμι ουτος ὁ Σωκρατης ὁ νυνι διαλεγομενος, that I AM that Socrates who now converses with you; but he thinks that I am he, ὃν οψεται ολιγον υστερον νεκρον, και ερωτᾳ πως δει με θαπτειν, whom he shall shortly see dead; and he asks how I would be buried?—I have asserted that after I have drunk the poison, I should no longer remain with you, but shall depart to certain felicities of the blessed." PLATONIS Phædo, Oper. Vol. I. edit. Bipont. p. 260.

Verse 16. Cunningly-devised fables] Σεσοφισμενοις μυθοις. I think with Macknight and others, from the apostle's using επoπται, eyewitnesses, or rather beholders, in the end of the verse, it is probable that he means those cunningly-devised fables among the Heathens, concerning the appearance of their gods on earth in human form. And, to gain the greater credit to these fables, the priests and statesmen instituted what they called the mysteries of the gods; in which the fabulous appearance of the gods was represented in mystic shows. But one particular show none but the fully initiated were permitted to behold: hence they were entitled επoπται, beholders. This show was probably some resplendent image of the god imitating life; which, by its glory, dazzled the eyes of the beholders; while their ears were ravished by hymns sung in its praise; to this it was natural enough for St. Peter to allude, when speaking about vised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but [a] were eyewitnesses of his majesty.

17 For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, [b] This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

18 And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in [c] the holy mount.

19 We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed,

[a] Matt. 17. 1, 2. Mark 9. 2. John 1. 14. 1 John 1. 1. & 4. 14.—
[b] Matt. 3. 17. & 17. 5. Mark 1. 11. & 9. 7. Luke 3. 22. & 9. 35.

[c] See Exod. 3. 5. Josh. 5. 15. Matt. 17. 1.

the transfiguration of Christ. Here the indescribably resplendent majesty of the Great God was manifested, as far as it could be, in conjunction with that human body in which the fulness of the Divinity dwelt. And we, says the apostle, were εποπται, beholders, της εκεινου μεγαλειοτητος, of his own Majesty. Here was no trick, no feigned show; we saw Him in His glory, whom thousands saw before and afterward; and we have made known to you the power and coming, παρουσιαν, the appearance and presence, of our Lord Jesus; and we call you to feel the exceeding greatness of this power in your conversion, and the glory of this appearance, in His revelation, by the power of His Spirit to your souls. These things we have witnessed, and these things ye have experienced; and therefore we can confidently say, that neither you nor we have followed cunningly-devised fables; but that blessed gospel which is the power of God to the salvation of every one that believes.

Verse 17. For he received—honour and glory] In his transfiguration, our Lord received from the Father, honour in the voice or declaration, which said, This is my Son, the beloved One, in whom I have delighted. And He received glory, when penetrated with, and involved in that excellent glory, the fashion of his countenance was altered; for his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white and glistering; exceeding white like snow: which most glorious, and preternatural appearance, was a confirmation of the supernatural voice; as the voice was of this preternatural appearance: and thus His Messiahship was attested in the most complete and convincing manner.

Verse 18. And this voice—we heard] That is, himself, James and John, heard it, and saw this glory; for these only were the εποπται, beholders, on the holy mount. It is worthy of remark, that our blessed Lord, who came to give a new law to mankind, appeared on this holy mount, with splendour and great glory; as God did, when He came on the holy Mount Sinai, to give the old law to Moses. And when the voice came from the excellent glory, This is my Son, the beloved One, in whom I have delighted; hear Him: the authority of the old law was taken away. Neither Moses nor Elijah, the law nor the prophets, must tabernacle among men, as teaching the whole way of salvation, and affording the means of eternal life: these things they had pointed out, but these things they did not contain; yet the fulfilment of their types and predictions rendered their declarations more firm and incontestable.—See below.

Verse 19. We have also a more sure word of prophecy] Εχομεν βεβαιοτερον τον προφητικον λογον, we have the prophetic doctrine more firm, or more confirmed; for in this sense the word βεβαιοω is used in several places in the New Testament: see 1 Cor. i. 1. Even as the testimony of Christ, εβεβαιωθη, was CONFIRMED among you. 2 Cor. i. 21.—Now he which stablisheth us, ο δε βεβαιων ημας, who CONFIRMETH us; Col. ii. 7.—Rooted and built up in him, and established in the faith; βεβαιουμενοι, CONFIRMED in the faith. Heb. ii. 3.—How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; ητις εβεβαιωθη, which was CONFIRMED to us. Heb. vi. 16.—And an oath; εις βεβαιωσιν, for CONFIRMATION. This is the literal sense of the passage in question; and this sense removes that ambiguity from the text which has given rise to so many different interpretations. Taken, according to the common translation, it seems to say that prophecy is a surer evidence of Divine revelation than miracles; and so it has been understood. The meaning of the apostle appears to be this: the law and the prophets have spoken concerning Jesus Christ; and Isaiah has particularly pointed Him out in these words, Behold my servant whom I uphold, my CHOSEN IN WHOM MY SOUL DELIGHTETH: I have put my Spirit upon him, and he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles; to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and THEM THAT SIT IN DARKNESS out of the prison-house, Isa. xlii. 1, 7. Now, both at His baptism, Matt. iii. 17. and at His transfiguration, Jesus Christ was declared to be this chosen person, God's only Son, the beloved One in WHOM HE DELIGHTED. The voice, therefore, from heaven, and the miraculous transfiguration of His Person, have confirmed the prophetic doctrine concerning Him. And to this doctrine, thus confirmed, you do well to take heed; for it is that Light that shines in the dark place, in the Gentile world, as well as among the Jews; giving light to them that sit in darkness; and bringing the prisoners out of the prison- house: and this ye must continue to do till the day of His second, last, and most glorious appearing to judge the world comes; and the Day star, Φωσφορος, this Light-bringer, arise in your hearts, manifests Himself to your eternal consolation. Or perhaps the latter clause of the verse might be thus understood: the prophecies concerning Jesus, which have been so signally confirmed to us on the holy mount, have always been as a light shining in a dark place, from the time of their delivery to the time in which the bright day of gospel light and salvation dawned forth, and the Sun of righteousness has arisen in our souls, with healing in His rays. And to this all who waited for Christ's appearing have taken heed. The word φωσφορος, phosphorus, generally signified the planet Venus, when she is the morning-star; and thus she is called in most European nations.

Verse 20. Knowing this first] Considering this as a first principle; that no prophecy of the Scripture, whether that referred to above, or any other, is of any private interpretation, proceeds from the prophet's own knowledge or invention: or was the offspring of calculation or conjecture. The word επιλυσις signifies also, impetus, impulse; and probably this is the best sense here:—not by the mere private impulse of his own mind.

Verse 21. For the prophecy came not in old time] That is, in any former time, by the will of man, by a man's own searching, conjecture, or calculation: but holy men of God, persons separated from the world, and devoted to God's service, spake, moved by the Holy Ghost. So far were they from inventing these prophetic declarations concerning Christ, or any future event, that they were φερομενοι, carried away, out of themselves, and out of the whole region, as it were, of human knowledge and conjecture, by the Holy Ghost; who without their knowing any thing of the matter, dictated to them what to speak, and what to write: and, as far above their knowledge were the words of the prophecy, that they did not even know the intent of those words, but searched what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ, which was in them, did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.—See 1 Pet. i. 11, 12. and the Notes there.

1. As the writer of this Epistle asserts that he was on the holy mount with Christ when He was transfigured, he must be either Peter, James, or John, for there was no other person present on that occasion except Moses and Elijah, in their glorious bodies. The Epistle was never attributed to James nor John; but the uninterrupted current, where its Divine inspiration was granted, gave it to Peter alone.—See the Preface.

2. It is not unfrequent for the writers of the New Testament to draw a comparison between the Mosaic and Christian dispensations: and the comparison generally shows, that glorious as the former was, it had no glory in comparison of the glory that excelleth. St. Peter seems to touch here on the same point: the Mosaic dispensation, with all the light of prophecy by which it was illustrated, was only as a lamp shining in a dark place. There is a propriety and delicacy in this image that are not generally noticed: a lamp in the dark gives but a very small portion of light, and only to those who are very near to it; yet it always gives light enough to make itself visible, even at a great distance: though it enlightens not the space between it and the beholder, it is still literally the lamp shining in a dark place: Such was the Mosaic dispensation: it gave a little light to the Jews, but shone not to the Gentile world, any farther than to make itself visible. This is compared with the gospel under the emblem of day-break, and the rising of the sun. When the sun is even eighteen degrees below the horizon, day-break commences; as the rays of light begin then to diffuse themselves in our atmosphere, by which they are reflected upon the earth. By this means, a whole hemisphere is enlightened, though but in a partial degree; yet this, increasing every moment, as the sun approaches the horizon, prepares for the full manifestation of his resplendent orb: so the ministry of John Baptist, and the initiatory ministry of Christ Himself, prepared the primitive believers for His full manifestation on the day of Pentecost, and afterward. Here the Sun rose in His strength, bringing light, heat, and life, to all the inhabitants of the earth. So far, then, as a lantern, carried in a dark night, differs from, and is inferior to, the beneficial effects of day-break, and the full light and heat of a meridian sun; so far was the Mosaic dispensation, in its beneficial effects, inferior to the Christian dispensation.

3. Perhaps there is scarcely any point of view in which we can consider prophecy, which is so satisfactory and conclusive as that which is here stated; that is, far from invent- ing the subject of their own predictions, the ancient prophets did not even know the meaning of what themselves wrote. They were carried beyond themselves by the influence of the Divine Spirit; and after ages were alone to discover the object of the prophecy; and the fulfilment was to be the absolute proof that the prediction was of God; and that it was of no private invention, no discovery made by human sagacity and wisdom, but by the especial revelation of the all-wise God. This is sufficiently evident in all the prophecies which have been already fulfilled; and will be equally so in those yet to be fulfilled, the events will point out the prophecy; and the prophecy will be seen to be fulfilled in that event.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. But there were false prophets] There were not only holy men of God among the Jews, who prophesied by Divine inspiration; but there were also false prophets, whose prophecies were from their own imagination, and perverted many.

As there shall be false teachers among you] At a very early period of the Christian church, many heresies sprung up; but the chief were those of the Ebionites, Cerinthians, Nicolaitans, Menandrians, and Gnostics, of whom many strange things have been spoken by the primitive fathers; and of whose opinions it is difficult to form any satisfactory view. They were no doubt bad enough; and their opponents, in general, have doubtless made them worse. By what name those were called of whom the apostle here speaks, we cannot tell. They were probably some sort of apostate Jews, or those called the Nicolaitans.—See the Preface.

Damnable heresies] Αιρεσεις απωλειας, heresies of destruction; such as, if followed, would lead a man to perdition. And these παρεισαξουσιν, they will bring in privately; cunningly, without making much noise; and as covertly as possible.

Denying the Lord that bought them] It is not certain whether God the Father be intended here, or our Lord Jesus Christ: for God is said to have purchased the Israelites, Exod. xv. 16. and to be the Father that had bought them, Deut. xxxii. 6. and the words may refer to these or such like passages; or they may point out Jesus Christ, who had bought them with His blood: and the heresies, or dangerous opinions, may mean such as opposed the Divinity of our Lord, or His meritorious and sacrificial death; or such opinions as bring upon those who hold them swift destruction. It seems, however, more natural, to understand the Lord that bought them, as applying to Christ, than otherwise: and if so, this is another proof, among many, 1. That none can be saved but by Jesus Christ. 2. That through their own wickedness some may perish for whom Christ died.

Verse 2. Many shall follow] Will follow; because determined to gratify their sinful propensities.

Pernicious ways] Ταις απωλειαις, their destruction; i. e. the heresies of destruction, or destructive opinions, men-ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of.

3 And [a] through covetousness shall they with feigned words [b] make merchandise of you: [c] whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not.

tioned above. But instead of απολειαις, destructions, ασελγειαις, lasciviousnesses, or uncleannesses, is the reading of ABC. and upwards of sixty others; most of which are among the most ancient, correct, and authentic. This is the reading also of both the Syriac, all the Arabic, the Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Slavonic, Vulgate, Chrysostom, Theophylact, Œcumenius, and Jerom. A very few, and those of little repute, have the word in the text.

The word lasciviousnesses is undoubtedly the true reading; and this points out what the nature of the heresies was: it was a sort of Antinomianism; they pampered and indulged the lusts of the flesh: and, if the Nicolaitans are meant, it is very applicable to them, for they taught the community of wives, &c.

By reason of whom] These were persons who professed Christianity; and because they were called Christians, and followed such abominable practices, the way of truth, the Christian religion, βλασφημηθησεται, was blasphemed. Had they called themselves by any name but that of Christ, His religion would not have suffered.

Verse 3. And through covetousness] That they might get money to spend upon their lusts: with feigned words, πλαστοις λογοις, with counterfeit tales, false narrations of pretended facts, lying miracles, fabulous legends. "In this single sentence," says Dr. Macknight, "there is a clear prediction of the iniquitous practices of those great merchants of souls, the Romish clergy, who have rated all crimes, even the most atrocious, at a fixed price; so that if their doctrine be true, whoever pays the price, may commit the crime without hazarding his salvation." How the popish church has made merchandise of souls needs no particular explanation here. It was this abominable doctrine that showed to some, then in that church, the absolute necessity of a reformation.

Whose judgment now of a long time] From the beginning God has condemned sin, and inflicted suitable punishments on transgressors; and has promised in His word, from the earliest ages, to pour out His indignation on the wicked.—The punishment, therefore, so long ago predicted, shall fall on these impure and incorrigible sinners: and the condemnation which is denounced against them, slumbers not; it is alert, it is on its way, it is hurrying on, and must soon overtake them.

Verse 4. For if God spared not the angels] The angels were originally placed in a state of probation: some having fallen, and some having stood, proves this. How long that probation was to last to them, and what was the particular test of their fidelity, we know not: nor indeed do we know what was their sin; nor when, nor how, they fell. St. Jude says, they kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation; which seems to indicate that they got discontented with their lot, and aspired to higher honours; or perhaps to celestial domination. The tradition of their fall is in all countries, and in all religions: but the accounts given are various and contradictory; and no wonder, for we have no direct revelation on the subject. They kept not their first estate, and they sinned, is the sum of what we know on the subject; and here curiosity and conjecture are useless.

But cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness] Αλλα σειραις ζοφου ταρταρωσας, παρεδωκεν εις κρισιν τετηρημενους, but with chains of darkness confining them in Tartarus, delivered them over to be kept to judgment; or, sinking them into Tartarus, delivered them over into custody for punishment, to chains of darkness. As the word Tartarus is found nowhere else in the New Testament, nor does it appear in the Septuagint, we must have recourse to the Greek writers for its meaning. Mr. Parkhurst, under the word ταρταροω, has made some good collections from those writers, which I here subjoin:—

"The Scholiast on ÆSCHYLUS, Eumen." says Pindar, "relates that Apollo overcame the Python by force; wherefore the earth endeavoured, ταρταρωσαι, to cast him into Tartarus. Tzetzes uses the same word ταρταροω, for casting or sending into Tartarus; and the compound verb καταταρταρειν is found in Apollodorus, in Didymus's Scholia on Homer, in Phurnutus, De. Nat. Deor. p. 11. edit. Gale, and in the book Περι Ποταμων, which is extant among the works of Plutarch. And those whom Apollodorus styles καταταρταρωθεντας, he, in the same breath, calls ριφθεντας εις Ταρταρον, cast into Tartarus. Thus the learned Windet, in Poole's Synopsis. We may then, I think, safely assert that ταρταρωσας, in St. Peter, means not as Mede, (Works, fol. p. 23.) interprets it, to adjudge to, but to cast into Tartarus, ριπτειν εις Ταρταρον, as in Homer, cited below. And in order to know what was the precise intention of the apostle by this expression, we must inquire what is the accurate import of the term Ταρταρος. Now, it appears from a passage of Lucian, that by Ταρταρος was meant, in a sinned, but [a] cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment;

5 And spared not the old world, but saved [b] Noah the eighth person, [c] a preacher of righteousness, [d] bringing physical sense, the bounds, or verge, of this material system; for addressing himself to ΕΡΩΣ, Cupid, or Love, he says, Συ γαρ εξ αφανους και κεχυμενης αμορφιας ΤΟ ΠΑΝ εμορφωσας. κ. τ. λ.—'Thou formedst the universe from its confused and chaotic state; and after separating and dispersing the circumfused chaos, in which, as in one common sepulchre, the whole world lay buried, Thou drovest it to the confines, or recesses, of outer Tartarus—

'Where iron gates and bars, of solid brass,
Keep it in durance irrefrangible;
And its return prohibit.'

"The ancient Greeks appear to have received, by tradition, an account of the punishment of the 'fallen angels,' and of bad men after death; and their poets did, in conformity, I presume, with that account, make Tartarus the place where the giants who rebelled against Jupiter, and the souls of the wicked, were confined. 'Here,' saith Hesiod, Theogon. line 720, 1. the rebellious Titans were bound in penal chains.

Τοσσον ενερθ' ὑπο γης οσον ουρανος εστ' απο γαιης, Ισον γαρ τ' απο γης ες ΤΑΡΤΑΡΟΝ ηεροεντα.

'As far beneath the earth, as earth from heaven;
For such the distance thence to Tartarus.'

"Which description will very well agree with the proper sense of Tartarus; if we take the earth for the centre of the material system, and reckon from our zenith, or the extremity of the heavens that is over our heads. But as the Greeks imagined the earth to be of a boundless depth; so it must not be dissembled that their poets speak of Tartarus as a vast pit, or gulf, in the bowels of it. Thus Hesiod, in the same poem, line 119. calls it—

ΤΑΡΤΑΡΑ τ' ηεροεντα μυχῳ χθονος ευρυοδειης.

'Black Tartarus, within earth's spacious womb.'

"And Homer, Iliad viii. line 13, &c. introduces Jupiter threatening any of the gods who should presume to assist either the Greeks or the Trojans, that he should either come back wounded to heaven, or be sent to Tartarus.

Η μιν ἑλων ριψω ες ΤΑΡΤΑΡΟΝ ηεροεντα,
Τηλε μαλ' ηχι βαθιστον ὑπο χθονος εστι βερεθρον,
Ενθα σιδηρειαι τε πυλαι, και χαλκεος ουδος,
Τοσσον ενερθ' αϊδεω, οσον ουρανος εστ' απο γαιης.

'Or far, O far from steep Olympus thrown,
Low in the deep Tartarean gulf shall groan.
That gulf which iron gates and brazen ground
Within the earth inexorable bound;
As deep beneath th' infernal centre hurl'd
As from that centre to the ethereal world.' POPE.

Where, according to Homer's description, Iliad viii. line 480, 1.

——— Ουτ' αυγης ὑπεριονος ηελιοιο
Τερπονθ' ὑπ' ανεμοισι· βαθυς δε τε ΤΑΡΤΑΡΟΣ αμφις.

'No sun e'er gilds the gloomy horrors there,
No cheerful gales refresh the lazy air;
But murky Tartarus extends around.' POPE.

Or, in the language of the old Latin poet, (cited by Cicero, Tuscul. lib. i. cap. 15.)

Ubi rigida constat crassa caligo inferûm.

"On the whole, then, Ταρταρωσας, in St. Peter, is the same as ριπτειν εις Ταρταρον, to throw into Tartarus, in Homer; only rectifying the poet's mistake of Tartarus being in the bowels of the earth, and recurring to the original sense of that word above explained; which, when applied to spirits, must be interpreted spiritually: and thus Ταρταρωσας will import, that God cast the apostate angels out of His presence, into that ζοφος του σκοτους, blackness of darkness, (2 Pet. ii. 17. Jude, ver. 13.) where they will be for ever banished from the light of His countenance, and from the beatifying influence of the ever-blessed Three; as truly as a person plunged into the torpid boundary of this created system would be from the light of the sun, and the benign operations of the material heavens."

By chains of darkness, we are to understand a place of darkness and wretchedness, from which it is impossible for them to escape.

Verse 5. Spared not the old world] The apostle's argument is this: If God spared not the rebellious angels, nor the sinful antediluvians, nor the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha, He will not spare those wicked teachers who corrupt the pure doctrines of Christianity.

be translated, Noah the eighth preacher of righteousness: but it seems most evident, from 1 Pet. iii. 20. that eight persons are here meant, which were the whole that were saved in the ark, viz. Shem, Ham, Japhet, and their three wives, six; Noah's wife, seven; and Noah himself the eighth. The form of expression, ογδοον Νωε, Noah the eighth, i. e. Noah and seven more, is most common in the Greek language. So in APPIAN. Bell. Pun. p. 12. Τριτος δε ποτε εν σπηλαιῳ κρυπτομενος ελαθε, sometimes he the third, (i. e. he with two others,) lay hid in a cave. ANDOCIDES, Orat. iv. p. 295. Αιρεθεις επι τουτῳ δεκατος αυτος, he himself the tenth, (i. e. he and nine others,) were chosen to this. See a number of other examples in Kypke.

World of the ungodly] A whole race without God; without any pure worship, or rational religion.

Verse 6. The cities of Sodom and Gomorrha] See the Notes on Gen. xix. for an account of the sin and punishment of these cities.

Making them an ensample] These three words, υποδειγμα, παραδειγμα, and δειγμα, are used to express the same idea; though the former may signify an example to be shunned; the second, an example to be followed; and the third, a simple exhibition. But these differences are not always observed.

Verse 7. Vexed with the filthy conversation] Καταπονουμενον υπο της των αθεσμων εν ασελγειᾳ αναστροφης, being exceedingly pained with the unclean conduct of those lawless persons. What this was, see in the history Gen. xix. and the Notes there.

Verse 8. That righteous man dwelling among them] Lot, after his departure from Abraham, A. M. 2086, lived at Sodom till A. M. 2107, a space of about twenty years: and as he had a righteous soul, he must have been tormented with the abominations of that people from day to day.

The word εβασανιζεν, tormented, is not less emphatic than the word καταπονουμενον, grievously pained, in the preceding verse; and show what this man must have felt in dwelling so long among a people so abandoned.

Verse 9. The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly] The preservation and deliverance of Lot gave the apostle occasion to remark, that God knew as well to save as to destroy; and that His goodness led Him as forcibly to save righteous Lot, as His justice did to destroy the rebellious in the instances already adduced. And the design of the apostle, in producing these examples, is to show to the people to whom he was writing, that, although God would destroy those false teachers, yet He would powerfully save His faithful servants from their contagion, and from their destruction. We should carefully observe—1. That the godly man is not to be preserved from temptation. 2. That he will be preserved in temptation. 3. That he will be delivered out of it.

Verse 10. But chiefly them that walk] That is, God will, in the most signal manner, punish them that walk after the flesh; addict themselves to sodomitical practices, and the lust of pollution: probably alluding to those most abominable practices where men abuse themselves, and abuse one another.

Despise government] They brave the power and authority of the civil magistrate; practising their abominations so as to keep out of the reach of the letter of the law: and they speak evil of dignities; they blaspheme civil government, they abhor the restraints laid upon men by the laws, and would wish all government destroyed, that they might live as they list.

Presumptuous are they] Τολμηται. They are bold and daring; headstrong, regardless of fear.

Self-willed] Αυθαδεις. Self-sufficient, presuming on themselves; following their own opinions, which no authority can induce them to relinquish.

Are not afraid to speak evil of dignities.] They are lawless and disobedient; spurn all human authority, and speak contemptuously of all legal and civil jurisdiction. Those in general despise governments, and speak evil of dignities, who wish to be under no control, that they may act as free-booters in the community.

Verse 11. Whereas angels, &c.] This is a difficult verse, but the meaning seems to be this: The holy angels, who are represented as bringing an account of the actions of the fallen angels before the Lord in judgment, simply state the facts without exaggeration, and without permitting any thing of a bitter, reviling, or railing spirit, to enter into their accusations: see Zech. iii. 1. and Jude 9. to the former of which St. Peter evidently alludes. But these persons not only speak of the actions of men which they conceive to be wrong; but do it with untrue colourings, and the greatest malevolence. Michael, the archangel, treated a damned spirit with courtesy; he only said, The Lord rebuke thee, Satan! but these treat the rulers of God's appointment with disrespect and calumny.

Before the Lord] Παρα Κυριῳ is wanting in a number of MSS. and most of the Versions.

Verse 12. But these, as natural brute beasts] Ως αλογα ζωα φυσικα, as those natural animals void of reason; following only the gross instinct of nature; being governed neither by reason nor religion.

Made to be taken and destroyed] Intended to be taken with nets and gins, and then destroyed, because of their fierce and destructive nature; so these false teachers and insurgents must be treated: first incarcerated, and then brought to judgment, that they may have the reward of their doings And thus, by blaspheming what they do not understand, they at last perish in their own corruption; i. e. their corrupt doctrines and vicious practices.

Verse 13. They that count it pleasure to riot in the day time.] Most sinners, in order to practise their abominable pleasures, seek the secrecy of the night; but these, bidding defiance to all decorum, decency, and shame, take the open day, and thus proclaim their impurities to the sun.

Spots—and blemishes] They are a disgrace to the Christian name.

Sporting themselves] Forming opinions which give license to sin; and then acting on those opinions; and thus riot in their own deceits.

With their own deceivings] Εν ταις απαταις. But instead of this, AB. and almost all the Versions, and several of the Fathers, have εν ταις αγαπαις, in your love-feasts: which is probably the true reading.

While they feast with you] It appears they held a kind of communion with the church, and attended sacred festivals, which they desecrated with their own unhallowed opinions and conduct.

Verse 14. Having eyes full of adultery] Μοιχαλιδος, of an adulteress; being ever bent on the gratification of their sensual desires: so that they are represented as having an adulteress constantly before their eyes; and that their eyes can take in no other object but her. But, instead of μοιχαλιδος of an adulteress, the Codex Alexandrinus, three others, with the Coptic, Vulgate, and one copy of the Itala, together with several of the Fathers, have μοιχαλιας, of adultery.

Cannot cease from sin] Which cease not from sin: they might cease from sin, but they do not; they love and practise it. This figure of speech is very common in the Greek writers; and Kypke gives many instances of it; which, indeed, carry the image too far to be here translated.

Beguiling unstable souls] The metaphor is taken from adulterers seducing unwary, inexperienced, and light trifling women: so do those false teachers seduce those who are not established in righteousness.

Exercised with covetous practices] The metaphor is taken from the Agonistæ in the Grecian games; who exercised themselves in those feats, such as wrestling, boxing, running, &c. in which they proposed to contend in the public games. These persons had their hearts schooled in nefarious practices; they had exercised themselves till they were perfectly expert in all the arts of seduction, overreaching, and every kind of fraud.

Cursed children] Such not only live under God's curse here, but they are heirs to it hereafter.

Verse 15. Which have forsaken the right way] As Balaam did; who, although God showed him the right way, took one contrary to it; preferring the reward offered him by Balak, to the approbation and blessing of God.

The way of Balaam] Is the counsel of Balaam. He counselled the Moabites to give their most beautiful young women to the Israelitish youth, that they might be enticed by them to commit idolatry.—See the Notes on Numb. xxii. 5, &c. and on xxiii. 1, &c.

The son of Bosor] Instead of Βοσορ, Bosor, two ancient MSS. and some of the Versions, have Βεωρ, Beor, to accommodate the word to the Hebrew text and the Septuagint. The difference in this name seems to have arisen from mistaking one letter for another in the Hebrew name, בְּעוֹר Beor, for בְּצוֹר Betsor or Bosor; tsaddi צ and ain ע, which are very like each other, being interchanged.

Verse 16. The dumb ass speaking with man's voice] See the Note on Numb. xxii. 28.

The madness of the prophet] Is not this a referrence to the speech of the ass, as represented in the Targums of Jonathan ben Uzziel and Jerusalem? "Wo to thee, Balaam, thou sinner, thou madman; there is no wisdom found in thee." These words contain nearly the same expressions as those in St. Peter.

Verse 17. These are wells without water] Persons who, by their profession, should furnish the water of life to souls athirst for salvation: but they have not this water; they are teachers without ability to instruct; they are sowers, and have no seed in their basket. Nothing is more cheering in the deserts of the East than to meet with a well of water; and nothing more distressing, when parched with thirst, than to meet with a well that contains no water.

Clouds that are carried with a tempest] In a time of great drought, to see clouds beginning to cover the face of the heavens, raises the expectation of rain; but to see these carried off by a sudden tempest, is a dreary disappointment. These false teachers were equally as unprofitable as the empty well, or the light dissipated cloud.

To whom the mist of darkness is reserved] That is, an eternal separation from the presence of God, and the glory of His power. They shall be thrust into outer darkness, Matt. viii. 12. into the utmost degrees of misery and despair. False and corrupt teachers will be sent into the lowest hell; and be "the most downcast, underfoot vassals of perdition."

It is scarcely necessary to notice a various reading here; which, though very different in sound, is nearly the same in sense. Instead of νεφελαι, clouds, which is the common reading, και ομιχλαι, and mists, or perhaps more properly thick darkness, from ομου, together, and αχλυς, darkness, is the reading in ABC. sixteen others, Erpen's Arabic, latter Syriac, Coptic, Æthiopic, and Vulgate; and several of the Fathers. This reading Griesbach has admitted into the text.

Verse 18. They speak great swelling words of vanity] The word υπερογκα signifies things of great magnitude; grand, superb, sublime: it sometimes signifies inflated, tumid, bombastic. These false teachers spoke of great and high things, and no doubt promised their disciples the greatest privileges, as they themselves pretended to a high degree of illumination. But they were all false and vain, though they tickled the fancy, and excited the desires of the flesh; and indeed this appears to have been their object. And hence, some think that the impure sect of the Nicolaitans is meant. See the Preface.

Those that were clean escaped] Those who, through hearing the doctrines of the gospel, and had been converted, were perverted by those false teachers.

Verse 19. While they promise them liberty] Either to live in the highest degrees of spiritual good, or a freedom from the Roman yoke; or from the yoke of the law, or what they might term needless restraints. Their own conduct showed the falsity of their system; for they were slaves to every disgraceful lust.

For of whom a man is overcome] This is in allusion to the ancient custom of selling for slaves those whom they had conquered and captivated in war. The ancient law was, that a man might either kill him whom he overcame in battle, or keep him for a slave. These were called servi, slaves, from the verb servare, to keep, or preserve. And they were also called mancipia, from manu capiuntur, they were taken captive by the hand of their enemy. Thus the person who is overcome by his lusts, is represented as being the slave of those lusts.—See Rom. vi. 16. and the Note there.

Verse 20. The pollutions of the world] Sin, in general: and particularly superstition, idolatry, and lasciviousness. These are called μιασματα, miasmata, things that infect, pollute, and defile. The word was anciently used, and is in use to the present day, to express those noxious particles, or effluvia, proceeding from persons infected with contagious and dangerous diseases; or from dead and corrupt bodies, stagnant and putrid waters, marshes, &c. by which the sound and healthy may be infected and destroyed.

The world is here represented as one large putrid marsh, or corrupt body, sending off its destructive miasmata every where, and in every direction, so that none can escape its contagion, and none can be healed of the great epidemic disease of sin, but by the mighty power and skill of God. St. Augustin has improved on this image: "The whole world," says he, "is one great diseased man, lying extended from East to West, from North to South; and to heal this great sick man, the Almighty Physician descended from heaven." Now, it is by the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, as says St. Peter, that we escape the destructive influence of these contagious miasmata. But if, after having been healed, and escaped the death to which we were exposed, we get again entangled, εμπλακεντες, enfolded, enveloped with them; then the latter end will be worse than the beginning: forasmuch as we shall have sinned against more light, and the soul, by its conversion to God, having had all its powers and faculties greatly improved, is now, being repolluted, more capable of iniquity than before, and can bear more expressively the image of the earthly.

Verse 21. For it had been better for them not to have known] For the reasons assigned above: because they have sinned against more mercy; are capable of more sin; and are liable to greater punishment.

The holy commandment] The whole religion of Christ is contained in this one commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength; and thy neighbour as thyself." He who obeys this great commandment, and this by the grace of Christ is possible to every man; is saved from sinning either against his God or against his neighbour. Nothing less than this, does the religion of Christ require.

Verse 22. According to the true proverb] This seems to be a reference to Prov. xxvi. 11. ככלב שב על קאו kecaleb shab âl keo; as the dog returneth to his vomit, so a fool repeateth his folly. In substance this proverb is found among the rabbins: so Midrash Ruth, in Sohar Chadash, fol. 62. Orphah is returned to her mire, Ruth persevered in spirit: and again, Ibid. fol. 64. "Orphah, which is נפש הבהמית nephesh habchemith, the bestial soul, is returned to her mire."

The Greeks have something like it: so Arrian, Dissert. Epict. l. iv. c. 11. says, Απηλθε και χοιρῳ διαλεγου, ἱν' εν βορβορῳ μη κυλιηται, "Go and reason with the swine, lest he be rolled in the mire." This is called a true proverb: for it is a fact, that a dog will eat up his own vomit; and a swine, howsoever carefully washed, will again wallow in the mire. As applied here, it is very expressive; the poor sinner, having heard the gospel of Christ, was led to loath and reject his sin; and, on his application to God for mercy, was washed from his unrighteousness. But he is here represented as taking up again what he had before rejected; and defiling himself in that, from which he had been cleansed.

Here is a sad proof of the possibility of falling from grace, and from very high degrees of it too. These had escaped from the contagion that was in the world: they had had true repentance, and cast up "their sour sweet morsel of sin;" they had been washed from all their filthiness, and this must have been through the blood of the Lamb; yet, after all they went back, got entangled with their old sins, swallowed down their formerly rejected lusts, and rewallowed in the mire of corruption. It is no wonder that God should say, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning: reason and nature say it must be so; and Divine justice says it ought to be so; and the person himself must confess that it is right that it should be so. But how dreadful is this state! How dangerous, when the person has abandoned himself to his old sins! Yet it is not said that it is impossible for him to return to his Maker: though his case be deplorable, it is not utterly hopeless; the leper may yet be made clean, and the dead may be raised. Reader, is thy backsliding a grief and burthen to thee? Then thou art not far from the kingdom of God: believe on the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle shows his design in writing this and the preceding Epistle, 1, 2. Describes the nature of the heresies which should take place in the last times, 3—8. A thousand years with the Lord are but as a day, 9. He will come and judge the world as He has promised; and the heavens and the earth shall be burnt up, 10. How those should live who expect these things, 11, 12. Of the new heavens and the new earth; and the necessity of being prepared for this great change, 13, 14. Concerning some difficult things in St. Paul's Epistles, 15, 16. We must watch against the error of the wicked; grow in grace, and give all glory to God, 17, 18.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. This second epistle] In order to guard them against the seductions of false teachers, he calls to their remembrance the doctrine of the ancient prophets, and the commands or instructions of the apostles, all founded on the same basis.

He possibly refers to the prophecies of Enoch, as mentioned by Jude, ver. 14, 15. of David, Psa. l. 1, &c. and of Daniel, xii. 2. relative to the coming of our Lord to judgment: and he brings in the instructions of the apostles of Christ, by which they were directed how to prepare to meet their God.

Verse 3. Knowing this first] Considering this in an especial manner, that those prophets predicted the coming of false teachers; and their being now in the church, proved how clearly they were known to God; and showed the Christians at Pontus the necessity of having no intercourse or connexion with them.

There shall come—scoffers] Persons who shall endeavour to turn all religion into ridicule; as this is the most likely way to depreciate truth in the sight of the giddy multitude. The scoffers having no solid argument to produce against revelation, endeavour to make a scaramouch of some parts; and then affect to laugh at it, and get superficial thinkers to laugh with them.

Walking after their own lusts] Here is the true source of all infidelity. The gospel of Jesus is pure and holy; and requires a holy heart, and holy life. They wish to follow their own lusts, and consequently cannot brook the restraints of the gospel: therefore, they labour to prove that it is not true, that they may get rid of its injunctions, and at last succeed in persuading themselves that it is a forgery; and then throw the reins on the neck of their evil propensities. Thus their opposition to revealed truth began and ended in their own lusts.

and Version of note; there shall come in the last days IN MOCKERY, εν εμπαιγμονη, scoffers walking after their own lusts. This is the reading of ABC. eleven others, both the Syriac, all the Arabic, Coptic, Æthiopic, Vulgate, and several of the Fathers. They come in mockery; this is their spirit and temper; they have no desire to find out truth; they take up the Bible merely with the design of turning it into ridicule.

The last days] Probably refer to the conclusion of the Jewish polity, which was then at hand.

Verse 4. Where is the promise of his coming] Perhaps the false teachers here referred to, were such as believed in the eternity of the world: the prophets and the apostles had foretold its destruction; and they took it for granted, if this were true, that the terrestrial machine would have begun long ago to have shown some symptoms of decay; but as they found that, since the patriarchs died, all things remained as they were from the foundation of the world: that is, men were propagated by natural generation: one was born and another died, and the course of nature continued regular in the seasons, succession of day and night, generation and corruption of animals and vegetables, &c. but they did not consider the power of the Almighty, by which the whole can be annihilated in a moment, as well as created. As, therefore, they saw none of these changes, they presumed that there would be none; and they intimated that there never had been any. The apostle combats this notion in the following verse.

Verse 5. For this they willingly are ignorant of] They shut their eyes against the light, and refuse all evidence: what does not answer their purpose they will not know. And the apostle refers to a fact that militates against their hypothesis, with which they refused to acquaint themselves; and their ignorance he attributes to their unwillingness to learn the true state of the case.

By the word of God the heavens were of old] I shall set down the Greek text of this extremely difficult clause:—Ουρανοι ησαν εκπαλαι, και γη εξ ὑδατος και δι' ὑδατος συνεστωσα, τῳ του Θεου λογῳ; translated thus by Mr. Wakefield—A heaven and an earth formed out of water, and by means of water, by the appointment of God, had continued from old time. Dr. Macknight thus—The heavens were anciently, and the earth of water; and through water the earth consists by the word of God. Kypke thus—The heavens were of old, and the earth, which is framed, by the word of God, from the waters, and between the waters. However we take the words, they seem to refer to the origin of the earth. It was the opinion of the remotest antiquity that the earth was formed out of water, or a primitive moisture, which they termed ὑλη, hylé, a first matter, or nutriment, for all things: but Thales pointedly taught, αρχην δε των παντων υδωρ υπεστησατω, all things derive their existence from water, and this very nearly expresses the sentiment of Peter, and nearly in his own terms too. But is this doctrine true? It must be owned that it appears to be the doctrine of Moses: In the beginning, says he, God made the heavens and the earth; and the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Now, these heavens and earth, which God made in the beginning, and which he says were at first formless and empty, and which he calls the deep, are in the very next verse called waters; from which it is evident that Moses teaches that the earth was made out of some fluid substance, to which the name of water is properly given. And that the earth was at first in a fluid mass, is most evident from its form: it is not round, as has been demonstrated by measuring some degrees near the north pole, and under the equator; the result of which proved that the figure of the earth was that of an oblate spheroïd, a figure nearly resembling that of an orange. And this is the form that any soft or elastic body would assume, if whirled rapidly round a centre, as the earth is around its axis. The measurement to which I have referred shows the earth to be flatted at the poles, and raised at the equator. And by this measurement, it was demonstrated, that the diameter of the earth at the equator was greater by about twenty-five miles than at the poles.

Now, considering the earth to be thus formed, εξ υδατος, of water, we have next to consider what the apostle means by δι' υδατος, variously translated by, out of, by means of, and between the water.

Standing out of the water gives no sense, and should be abandoned. If we translate between the waters, it will bear some resemblance to Gen. i. 6, 7. And God said, let there be a firmament in the midst of בתוך betoc, between the waters; and let it divide the waters from the waters; and God divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament; then it may refer to the whole of the atmosphere, with which the earth is every where surrounded; and which contains all the vapours which belong to our globe; and without which we could neither have animal nor vegetative life. Thus, then, the earth or terraqueous globe, which was originally formed out of water, subsists by water; and by means of that very water, the water compacted with the earth, the fountains of the great deep; and the waters in the atmosphere, the windows of heaven, Gen. vii. 11. the antediluvian earth was destroyed by water, as St. Peter states in the next verse. The terraqueous globe, which was formed originally of water, or a fluid substance, the chaos or first matter, and was suspended in the heavens, the atmosphere, enveloped with water; by means of which water it was preserved: yet, because of the wickedness of its inhabitants, it was destroyed by those very same waters out of which it was originally made, and by which it subsisted.

Verse 7. But the heavens and the earth which are now] The present earth, and its atmosphere, which are liable to the same destruction, because the same means still exist, (for there is still water enough to drown the earth, and there is iniquity enough to induce God to destroy it and its inhabitants,) are nevertheless kept in store, τεθησαυρισμενοι, treasured up, kept in God's storehouse to be destroyed, not by water, but by fire at the day of judgment.

From all this it appears that those mockers affected to be ignorant of the Mosaic account of the formation of the earth: and of its destruction by the waters of the deluge: and indeed this is implied in their stating that all things continued as they were from the creation. But St. Peter calls them back to the Mosaic account, to prove that this was false; for the earth, &c. which were then formed, had perished by the flood; and that the present earth, &c. which were formed out of the preceding, should, at the day of judgment, perish by the fire of God's wrath.

Verse 8. Be not ignorant] Though they are wilfully ignorant, neglect not ye the means of instruction.

One day is with the Lord as a thousand years] That is, all time is as nothing before Him; because, in the presence, as in the nature of God, all is eternity; therefore nothing is long, nothing short before Him; no lapse of ages impair His purposes; nor need He wait to find convenience to execute those purposes. And when the longest period of time has passed by, it is but as a moment, or indivisible point, in comparison of eternity. This thought is well expressed by PLUTARCH, Consol. ad Apoll. "If we compare the time of life with eternity, we shall find no difference between long and short. Τα γαρ χιλια, και τα μυρια ετη, στιγμη τις εστιν αορισοι, μαλλον δε μοριον τι βραχυτατον στιγμης; for a thousand, or ten thousand years, are but a certain indefinite point; or rather the smallest part of a point." The words of the apostle seem to be a quotation from Psal. xc. 4.

Verse 9. The Lord is not slack] They probably in their mocking said, "either God had made no such promise to judge the world, destroy the earth, and send ungodly men to perdition; or, if He had, He had forgotten to fulfil it, or had not convenient time or leisure." To some such mocking the apostle seems to refer: and he immediately shows the reason why deserved punishment is not inflicted on a guilty world:—

But is long-suffering] It is not slackness, remission, nor want of due displicence at sin, that induced God to prolong the respite of ungodly men; but His long-suffering, His unwillingness that any should perish: and therefore He spared them, that they may have additional offers of grace, and be led to repentance; to deplore their sins, implore God's mercy, and find redemption through the blood of the Lamb.

As God is not willing that any should perish, and as He is willing that all should come to repentance, consequently, He has never devised nor decreed the damnation of any man; nor has He rendered it impossible for any soul to be saved; either by necessitating him to do evil, that he might die for it, or refusing him the means of recovery, without which he could not be saved.

Verse 10. The day of the Lord will come] See Matt. xxiv. 43. to which the apostle seems to allude.

The heavens shall pass away with a great noise] As the heavens mean here, and in the passages above, the whole atmosphere, in which all the terrestrial vapours are lodged; and as water itself is composed of two gases, eighty-five parts in weight of oxygen and fifteen of hydrogen; or two parts in volume of the latter, and one of the former: (for if these quantities be put together, and several electric sparks passed through them, a chymical union takes place, and water is the product; and, vice versâ, if the galvanic spark be made to pass through water, a portion of the fluid is immediately decomposed into its two constituent gases, oxygen and hydrogen;) and as the electric, or ethereal fire, is that which, in all likelihood, God will use in the general conflagration; the noise occasioned by the application of this fire to such an immense congeries of aqueous particles as float in the atmosphere, must be terrible in the extreme. Put a drop of water on an anvil, place over it a piece of iron red hot, strike the iron with a hammer on the part above the drop of water, and the report will be as loud as a musket: when, then, the whole strength of those opposite agents is brought together into a state of conflict, the noise, the thunderings, the innumerable explosions, (till every particle of water on the earth, and in the atmosphere, is, by the action of the fire, reduced into its component gaseous parts,) will be frequent, loud, confounding, and terrific, beyond every comprehension but that of God Himself.

The elements shall melt with fervent heat] When the fire has conquered and decomposed the water, the elements, στοιχεια, the hydrogen and oxygen airs or gases, (the former of which is most highly inflammable, and the latter an eminent supporter of all combustion,) will occupy distinct regions of the atmosphere, the hydrogen by its very great levity ascending to the top, while the oxygen from its superior specific gravity will keep upon or near the surface of the earth; and thus, if different substances be once ignited, the fire, which is supported in this case not only by the oxygen which is one of the constituents of atmospheric air, but also by a great additional quantity of oxygen obtained from the decomposition of all aqueous vapours, will rapidly seize on all other substances, on all terrestrial particles, and the whole frame of Nature will be necessarily torn in pieces; and thus the earth and its works be burnt up.

Verse 11. All these things shall be dissolved] They will all be separated, all decomposed; but none of them destroyed. And as they are the original matter out of which God formed the terraqueous globe, consequently they may enter again into the composition of a new system; and therefore the apostle says, ver. 13. We look for a new heaven and a new earth: the others being decomposed, a new system is to be formed out of their materials. There is a wonderful philosophic propriety in the words of the apostle in describing this most awful event.

What manner of persons ought ye to be] Some put the note of interrogation at the end of this clause, and join the remaining part with the 12th verse, thus—Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be? By holy conversation and godliness, expecting and earnestly desiring the coming of the day of God, &c. Only those who walk in holiness, who live a godly and useful life, can contemplate this most awful time with joy.

The word σπευδοντας, which we translate hasting unto, should be rendered earnestly desiring, or wishing for; which is a frequent meaning of the word in the best Greek writers.

Verse 12. The heavens being on fire] See on ver. 10. It was an ancient opinion among the heathens, that the earth should be burnt up with fire: so Ovid, Met. lib. i. v. 256.

Esse quoque in fatis reminiscitur, adfore tempus
Quo mare, quo tellus correptaque regia cœli
Ardeat; et mundi moles operosa laboret.

"Remembering in the fates, a time when fire Should to the battlements of heaven aspire,
And all his blazing world above should burn,
And all the inferior globe to cinders turn." Dryden.

opinion of the Stoics, that the moisture of the earth being consumed, the whole world would catch fire. The Epicureans held the same sentiment; and indeed it appears in various authors, which proves that a tradition of this kind has pretty generally prevailed in the world. But it is remarkable that none have fancied that it will be destroyed by water. The tradition, founded on the declaration of God, was against this: therefore, it was not received.

Verse 13. We, according to his promise, look for new heavens] The promise to which it is supposed the apostle alludes, is found Isa. lxv. 17. Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind; and chap. lxvi. 22. For as the new heavens and the new earth which I shall make shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed, &c. Now, although these may be interpreted of the glory of the gospel dispensation; yet, if St. Peter refer to them, they must have a more extended meaning.

It does appear from these promises, what the apostle says here, and what is said Rev. xxi. 27. xxii. 14, 15. that the present earth, though destined to be burnt up, will not be destroyed, but be renewed and refined, purged from all moral and natural imperfection, and made the endless abode of blessed spirits. But this state is certainly to be expected after the day of judgment; for, on this, the apostle is very express, who says the conflagration and renovation are to take place at the judgment of the great day; see ver. 7, 8, 10, and 12. That such an event may take place is very possible; and, from the terms used by St. Peter, is very probable. And, indeed, it is more reasonable and philosophical to conclude that the earth shall be refined and restored, than finally destroyed. But this has nothing to do with what some call the millennium state; as this shall take place when time, with the present state and order of things, shall be no more.

Verse 14. Seeing that ye look for such things] As ye profess that such a state of things shall take place, and have the expectation of enjoying the blessedness of it, be diligent in the use of every means and influence of grace, that ye may be found of him, the Lord Jesus, the Judge of quick and dead: without spot, any contagion of sin in your souls: and blameless, being not only holy and innocent, but useful in your lives.

Verse 15. And account that the long-suffering of our Lord] Conclude that God's long-suffering with the world is a proof that He designs men to be saved; even as our beloved brother Paul. "This Epistle being written to those to whom the first epistle was sent, the persons to whom the apostle Paul wrote concerning the long-suffering of God were the Jewish and Gentile Christians in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia. Accordingly, we know he wrote to the Ephesians, (chap. ii. 3, 4, 5.) to the Colossian, (chap. i. 21.) and to Timothy, (1 Epist. chap. iii. 3. 4.) things which imply that God's bearing with sinners is intended for their salvation. The persons to whom Peter's epistles were sent were, for the most part, Paul's converts." Macknight.

According to the wisdom given unto him] That is, according to the measure of the Divine inspiration, by which he was qualified for the Divine work; and by which he was so capable of entering into the deep things of God. It is worthy of remark, that Paul's epistles are ranked among the Scriptures; a term applied to those writings which are divinely inspired; and to those only.

Verse 16. As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things] Paul, in all his epistles, says Dr. Macknight, has spoken of the things written by Peter in this letter. For example, he has spoken of Christ's coming to judgment, 1 Thess. iii. 13. iv. 14—18. 2 Thess. i. 7—10. Titus ii. 13. And of the resurrection of the dead, 1 Cor. xv. 22. Phil. iii. 20, 21. And of the burning of the earth, 2 Thess. i. 8. And of the heavenly country, 2 Cor. v. 1—10. And of the introduction of the righteous into that country, 1 Thess. iv. 17. Heb. iv. 9. xii. 14, 18, 24. And of the judgment of all mankind by Christ, Rom. xiv. 10.

In which are some things hard to be understood] Δυσνοητα τινα; that is, if we retain the common reading εν οις, in or among which things, viz. what he says of the day of judgment, the resurrection of the body, &c. &c. there are some things difficult to be comprehended, and from which a wrong or false meaning may be taken. But, if we take the reading of AB. twelve others, with both the Syriac, all the Arabic and Theophylact, εν αις, the meaning is more general, as εν αις must refer to επιστολαις, epistles, for this would intimate that there were difficulties in all the epistles of St. Paul: and, indeed, in what ancient writings are there not difficulties? But the Papists say that the decision of all matters relative to the faith is not to be expected from the Scriptures on this very account, but must be received from the church; i. e. the Popish or Romish church. But what evidence have we that that church can infallibly solve any of those difficulties? We have none! And till we have an express unequivocal revelation from heaven that an unerring Spirit is given to that church; I say for example, to the present church of Rome, with the pope, called Pius VII. at its head, we are not to receive its pretensions: any church may pretend the same, or any number of equally learned men as there are of cardinals and pope in the conclave. And, after all, it would be but the opinion of so many men, to which no absolute certainty or infallibility could be attached.

This verse is also made a pretext to deprive the common people of reading the word of God; because the unlearned and unstable have sometimes wrested this word to their own destruction: but if it be human learning, and stability in any system of doctrine, that qualifies men to judge of these difficult things; then we can find many thousands even in Europe, that have as much learning and stablility as the whole college of cardinals, and perhaps ten thousand times more; for that conclave was never very reputable for the learning of its members; and to other learned bodies we may, with as much propriety, look up as infallible guides as to this conclave.

Besides, as it is only the unlearned, and the unestablished, (that is, young Christian converts,) that are in danger of wresting such portions; the learned, that is, the experienced and the established in the knowledge and life of God, are in no such danger; and to such we may safely go for information: and these abound every where, especially in Protestant countries; and by the labours of learned and pious men on the Sacred writings there is not one difficulty relative to the things which concern our salvation left unexplained. If the members of the Romish church have not these advantages, let them go to those who have them: and if their teachers are afraid to trust them to the instruction of the Protestants, then let them who pretend to have infallibly written their exposition of those difficult places, also put them with a wholesome text in the vulgar language, into the hands of their people, and then the appeal will not lie to Rome, but to the Bible; and those interpretations will be considered according to their worth, being weighed with other Scriptures, and the expositions of equally learned and equally infallible men.

We find, lastly, that those who wrest such portions, are those which wrest the other Scriptures to their destruction; therefore, they are no patterns, nor can such form any precedent for withholding the Scriptures from the common people; most of whom, instead of wresting them to their destruction, would become wise unto salvation by reading them. We may defy the Romish church to adduce a single instance of any soul that was perverted, destroyed, or damned, by reading of the Bible: and the insinuation that they may, is blasphemous. I may just add that the verb στρεβλοω, which the apostle uses here, signifies to distort, to put to the rack, to torture, to overstretch and and dislocate the limbs; and hence the persons here intended are those who proceed according to no fair plan of interpretation; but force unnatural and sophistical meanings on the word of God: a practice which the common simple Christian is in no danger of following. I could illustrate this by a multitude of interpretations from Popish writers.

Verse 17. Seeing ye know—before] Seeing that by prophets and apostles you have been thus forewarned. beware, φυλασσεσθε keep watch, be on your guard; cleave to God and the word of His grace, lest ye be led away from the truth delivered by the prophets and apostles; by the error of the wicked, αθεσμων, of the lawless, those who wrest the Scriptures to make them countenance their lusts, exorbitant exactions, and lawless practices.

Fall from your own steadfastness] From that faith in Christ which has put you in possession of that grace which establishes the heart.

Verse 18. But grow in grace] Increase in the image and favour of God: every grace and Divine influence which ye have received is a seed, a heavenly seed, which, if it be watered with the dew of heaven from above, will endlessly increase and multiply itself. He who continues to believe, love, and obey, will grow in grace, and continually increase in the knowledge of Jesus Christ, as his Sacrifice, Sanctifier, Counsellor, Preserver, and final Saviour. The life of a Christian is a growth; he is at first born of God, and is a little child; becomes a young man, and a father in Christ. Every father was once an infant; and had he not grown, he would have never been a man. Those who content themselves with the grace they received when converted to God, are, at best, in a continual state of infancy: but we find, in the order of nature, that the infant that does not grow, and grow daily too, is sickly and soon dies; so in the order of grace, those who do not grow up into Jesus Christ, are sickly, and soon die; die to all sense and influence of heavenly things.

There are many who boast of the grace of their conversion; persons who were never more than babes, and have long since lost even that grace, because they did not grow in it. Let him that readeth understand.

To him] The Lord Jesus, be glory, all honour and excellency, attributed; both now, in this present state, and for ever, εις ημεραν αιωνος, to the day of eternity; that in which death, and misery, and trial, and darkness, and change, and time itself, are, to the righteous, for ever at an end: it is eternal; and this eternity is one unalterable, interminable, unclouded, and unchangeable DAY!

Amen] So let it be! and so it shall be! Though this word is wanting in some reputable MSS. yet it should be retained, as it has here more than usual authority in its support.

We have now passed over all the canonical writings of Peter that are extant; and it is worthy of remark, that, in no place of the two epistles, already examined, nor in any of this apostle's sayings, in any other parts of the Sacred Writings, do we find any of the peculiar tenets of the Romish church: not one word of his or the Pope's supremacy; not one word of those who affect to be his successors; nothing of the infallibility claimed by those pretended successors; nothing of purgatory, penances, pilgrimages, auricular confession, power of the keys, indulgences, extreme unction, masses, and prayers for the dead; and not one word on the most essential doctrine of the Romish church, transubstantiation. Now, as all these things have been considered by themselves most essential to the being of that church; is it not strange that he, from whom they profess to derive all their power, authority, and influence, in spriritual and secular matters, should have said nothing of these most necessary things! Is it not a proof that they are all false and forged? That the holy apostle knew nothing of them; that they are no part of the doctrine of God: and, although they distinguish the church of Rome, do not belong to the church of Christ. It is no wonder that the rulers of this church endeavour to keep the Scriptures from the common people; for, were they permitted to consult these, the imposture would be detected, and the solemn destructive cheat at once exposed.

END OF THE NOTES ON THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PETER.

PREFACE

JOHN.

As the author of this Epistle is the same who wrote the gospel, I need not detain the Reader with any particulars of his life; having taken up the subject pretty much at large in my Preface to his Gospel; to which I must refer for that species of information.

Two questions have been urged relative to this Epistle, which are very difficult to be solved:—1. When was it written?—2. To whom was it sent? The precise year it is impossible to determine; but it was probably written before the destruction of Jerusalem; and perhaps about the year 68 or 69, though some think not before 80. The second question, Michaelis answers thus:—

"This question is still more difficult to decide than the preceding. In the Latin version it was formerly called The Epistle of St. John to the Parthians; and this title was adopted by some of the ancient fathers; and in modern times has been defended by Grotius. But if St. John had intended this Epistle for the use of the Parthians, he would hardly have written it in Greek, but would have used either the language of the country, or, if he was unacquainted with it, would have written at least in Syriac, which was the language of the learned in the Parthian empire, and especially of the Christians. We know from the history of Manes, that even the learned in that country were, for the most part, unacquainted with the Greek language; for to Manes, though he united literature with genius, his adversaries objected that he understood only the barbarous Syriac. That a Grecian book would not have been understood in the Parthian empire, appears from what Josephus says in the Preface to his History of the Jewish War, where he declares, that a work intended for Parthian Jews must be written not in Greek, but Hebrew. However, it is worth while to examine whence the superscription 'ad Parthos' took its rise. Whiston conjectures, that an ancient Greek superscription of this Epistle was, προς παρθενους, (to virgins) because this Epistle is chiefly addressed to uncorrupted Christians, and that this title was falsely copied προς Παρθους, whence was derived the Latin superscription, 'ad Parthos.' But this conjecture is without foundation; for, since the faithful are not called in a single instance throughout the whole Epistle by the name of παρθενους, it is very improbable that the title προς παρθενους was ever affixed to it. I would rather suppose, therefore, that the frequent use in this Epistle of the words 'light' and 'darkness,' which occur in the Persian philosophy, and on the same occasions as those on which St. John has used them, gave rise to the opinion that St. John wrote it with a view of correcting the abuses of the Persian philosophy; whence it was inferred that he designed it for the use of the Christians in the Parthian empire. That St. John really designed his Epistle as a warning to those Christians who were in danger of being infected with Zoroastrian principles is very probable, though the language of the Epistle will not permit us to place St. John's readers in a country to the east of the Euphrates.

"Lampe, who appeals to Theodoret, contends, that it was not designed for any particular community, but that it was written for the use of Christians of every denomination; and this is really the most probable opinion, since the Epistle contains no reference to any individual church. The only difficulty attending this opinion lies in the name, 'Epistle' because the frequent use, in an Epistle, of the terms 'light and darkness,' taken in the Persian sense of these words, seems to imply that it was written to persons of a particular description. But if we call it a Treatise, this difficulty will cease; and, in fact, the name 'Epistle,' is improperly applied to it, since it has nothing which entitles it to this appellation. It does not begin with the salutation which is used in Greek epistles, and with which St. John himself begins his two last Epistles; nor does it contain any salutations, though they are found in almost all the epistles of the apostles. It is true, that St. John addresses his Readers in the second person; but this mode of writing is frequently adopted in books, and especially in Prefaces: for instance, in Wolfe's Elements of Mathematics, the Reader is addressed throughout in the second person. I consider, therefore, that, which is commonly called the First Epistle of St. John, as a book, or treatise, in which the apostle declared to the whole world his disapprobation of the doctrines maintained by Cerinthus and the Gnostics. However, as I do not think it worth while to dispute about words, I have retained the usual title, and have called it the First Epistle of St. John.

"That the design of this Epistle was to combat the doctrine delivered by certain false teachers, appears from chap. ii. 18—26. iii. 7. iv. 1—3. and what this false doctrine was may be inferred from the counter doctrine delivered by St. John, ch. v. 1—6. The apostle here asserts, that 'Jesus is the Christ,' and that He was the Christ, 'not by water only, but by water and blood.' Now, these words, which are not in themselves very intelligible, become perfectly clear, if we consider them as opposed to the doctrine of Cerinthus, who asserted, that Jesus was by birth a mere man; but that the Æon, Christ, descended on Him at His baptism, and left Him before His death. But if what St. John says, ch. v. 1. 6. was opposed to Cerinthus, the Antichrists of whom he speaks, ch. ii. 18, 19. and who, according to ver. 22. denied that Jesus was the Christ, as also the false prophets, mentioned ch. iv. 1, 3. must be Cerinthians, or at least Gnostics. That they were neither Jews nor Heathens, may be inferred from chap. ii. 19. where St. John says—'They went out from us.' Further, he describes them, ch. ii. 18. as persons who had lately appeared in the world. But this description suits neither Jews nor Heathens, who, when this Epistle was written, had not lately begun to deny that Jesus was the Christ. Lastly, in the same verse, he describes them as tokens of the last time, saying, 'As ye have heard that Antichrist shall come, even now there are many Antichrists, whereby we know that it is the last time.' But this inference could not be drawn from the refusal of the Jews to acknowledge that Jesus was the Messiah. Now as soon as we perceive that the position, 'Jesus is the Christ,' is a counter-position against Cerinthus, we may infer, as I have already observed, that the Antichrists who denied that Jesus was the Christ, or who denied that Christ had appeared in the flesh, were Cerinthians; or perhaps the latter were Docetes. It is, therefore, highly probable, that the whole Epistle, which in various places discovers an opposition to false teachers, was written against Cerinthians, or at least against Gnostics and Magi. A proposition can never be completely understood, unless we know the author's design in delivering it. For instance, 'God is light, and in Him is not darkness,' appears to contain a tautology, if we consider it as a detached dogma; and if it be considered as an admonitory proposition, it may be thought to contain a severe reproof. But, if we regard it in a polemical view, it will present itself under a very different form. This Epistle abounds with exhortations: but no man who wishes to understand it, will be satisfied without asking the following questions:—Why did St. John give these admonitions? Why has he so frequently repeated them? Why has he admonished if he thought admonition necessary, merely in general terms, to holiness and brotherly love? And why has he not sometimes descended to particulars, as other apostles have done? An answer to these questions will throw great light on the Epistle; and this light I will endeavour to procure for the Reader, by pointing out the several propositions, which in my opinion, are laid down in opposition to Gnostic errors.

"I. In the first chapter, the four first verses are opposed to the following assertion of the Gnostics: 'That the apostles did not deliver the doctrine of Jesus as they had received it, but made additions to it, especially in the commandments, which were termed legal, whereas they themselves (the Gnostics) retained the genuine and uncorrupted mystery.' St. John, therefore, says—'That he declared that which was from the beginning, which he himself had seen and heard:' that is, that he taught the doctrine of Christ as it was originally delivered; as he had heard it from Christ's own mouth, whose Person he had seen and felt; and that he made no additions of his own, but only reported as a faithful witness. In like manner he appeals, ch. ii. 13, 14. to the elder Christians, whom he calls fathers, "because they knew him who was from the beginning;' that is, because they knew how Christ had taught from the beginning; and, ver. 24. he says, 'Let that abide in you which ye have heard from the beginning.' Further, he says, Chap. ii. 7. 'Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment, which ye had from the beginning.' In the next verse he adds, 'Again a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you, because the darkness is past and the light now shineth.' Now Christ Himself had given His disciples a commandment, which He called a new commandment, and this was, 'That they should love one another.' The term 'new commandment,' therefore, St. John borrowed from Christ; but in the present instance he appears to have applied it to a different subject, because the special command which Christ gave to his disciples that they should love one another, and which He called a new commandment, could not well be called an old commandment, being very different from the general commandment, that we should love our neighbour. St. John, therefore, very probably meant, that the commandment of love and sanctification was no new commandment, as the Gnostics contended; but the old commandment which the Christians had heard from the beginning. It was indeed, become a new commandment, in consequence of the false doctrines which then prevailed; or, rather it appeared to be so, because the Gnostics had endeavoured to banish it from their system of theology. But whether a new, or an old commandment, St. John thought proper to enforce it.

" 2. The Gnostics, who contended that those commandments which were legal were not given by Christ, but were added by the apostles, without His authority; counteracted, by so doing, the whole doctrine of sanctification. St. John, therefore, devotes the greatest part of his Epistle to the confirmation and enforcement of this doctrine. In the first chapter, ver. 5. 7. he asserts, as a principal part of the message which he had heard from Christ, that no one who does not walk in the light, has fellowship with God. In the three following verses he limits this proposition in such a manner as was necessary, in arguing with an adversary; and ch. ii. 1, 2. he removes the objection, that according to his doctrine, a Christian, who was guilty of wilful sins, lost thereby all hopes of salvation. He then maintains, ver. 3—5. and apparently in allusion to the word γνωσις (knowledge) the favourite term of the Gnostics, that he who boasted of profound knowledge, and at the same time rejected the commandments of Christ, had not a real, but only a pretended knowledge; and that in him only the love of God is perfected, (τετελειωται) who keeps God's word. The expression τετελειωται is a term which was used in the schools of the philosophers, and applied to the scholars called esoterici, who had made a considerable progress in the inner school. Now, the Gnostics were, in their own opinion, scholars of this description: but since they, whose imaginary system of theology annuls the commands of God, are so far from being perfect, that they are not even beginners in the science, St. John very properly refuses to admit their pretensions, and opposes to them others, who were perfect in a different way, and who were more justly entitled to the appellation. With respect to the expressions 'keeping the commandments of God,' or, 'not keeping His commandments,' it must be observed, that when used in a polemical work, they denote, not merely the observance, or violation, of God's commands, in our own practice, but the teaching of others, that they are to be observed or rejected. What St. John says, ver. 7, 8. has been already explained in the preceding paragraph.

" The whole of the third chapter, and part of the fourth, are devoted to the doctrine of sanctification, on which I have to make the following remarks: When St. John says, ch. iii. 7—'Let no man deceive you; he who doeth righteousness is righteous,' he probably intends not merely to deliver a precept, but to oppose the doctrine of those who asserted that a man, though he sinned, might be righteous in respect to his spiritual soul, because sin proceeded only from the material body. A similar observation may be applied to ver. 4. 'Whosoever committeth sin, transgresseth also the law;' which, considered by itself, appears to be an identical proposition; but when considered as an assertion opposed to the Gnostics, it is far from being superfluous, because, evident as it appears to be, they virtually denied it. From the passage above quoted from the works of Irenæus, we have seen that they rejected the legal commandments as parts of the Christian religion which were not warranted by the authority of Christ; consequently, they denied that sin was a transgression of the law. Further, it was consistent with their principles to regard sins as diseases: for they believed in metempsychosis, and imagined that the souls of men were confined in their present bodies, as in a prison, and as a punishment for having offended in the region above. According to this system, the violent and irregular passions of anger, hatred, &c. were tortures for the soul; they were diseases, but not punishable transgressions of the law. I will not assert that all who believed in a transmigration of souls argued in this manner; but some of them certainly did so; and against these it was not superfluous to write, 'Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law, for sin is the transgression of the law.'

"The love of the brethren, which St. John enforced as a chief commandment, is generally understood of that special love, which Christ commanded His disciples to have towards each other. But I rather think, that St. John means the love of our neighbour in general; which Christ commanded, as comprehending the half of the law; for this general love St. John might very properly call the love of our brother, since God has created us all, and is our common Father. Besides, as St. John calls Cain Abel's brother, he could not intend to signify by this term a person of the same religious sentiments. Nor would it have been consistent with candour to have censured the Gnostics for not having Christian brotherly love towards St. John, and other true believers: for in this particular sense they were not brethren; and St. John himself, in his Second Epistle, ver. 10. forbids the exercise of Christian brotherly love towards those who teach false doctrines. I believe, therefore, that the brotherly love of which St. John speaks, in the third chapter of this Epistle, is not confined to that special love which we owe to those who are allied to us by religion; but denotes the love of our neighbour in general. Nor do I except even the 16th verse, where some think that St. John would require too much, if he meant brotherly love in general, or charity towards all men. But are there not certain cases in which it is our duty to hazard, and even sacrifice our lives, in order to rescue our neighbour? Is not this duty performed by the soldier? And is it not performed by him who visits those who are infected with contagious diseases? It is true, that this is not a duty which every man owes, in all cases, to his neighbour;—but then, on the other hand, is it not a duty which every man owes to his spiritual brother? Nor was it St. John's design so much to enforce this duty, and to recommend the exercise of it, as to argue from the acknowledgment of this duty in certain cases, to the necessity of performing the less painful duty of supporting our brethren in distress, by a participation of our temporal possessions. But though I believe that in the third chapter St. John speaks of the love of our neighbour in general; I do not mean to affirm, that he nowhere understands that special love which Christians owe one to another, of which we meet with an instance in ch. v. 1, 2.

"With respect to the moral conduct of the Gnostics, against whom St. John wrote, we may infer, therefore, that the apostle found more reason to censure them for their want of charity towards their neighbours, than for dissoluteness or debauchery. This want of charity they probably displayed by a hatred of the true believers.

"What St. John says, ch. v. 3. That God's commandments are not grievous, appears in the clearest light, when we consider it as opposed to the Gnostics, to whom the Divine commandments, as delivered by the apostles, appeared to be too legal.

"3. St. John declares, chap. i. 5. as the message which he had heard from Christ, 'That God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all.' Now if this proposition had been then as generally admitted as it is at present, there could have been no necessity for declaring it at the very beginning of the Epistle, with so much energy, to be the grand message of Christ. We may reasonably infer, therefore, that it was opposed to certain persons who delivered a contrary doctrine. Further, the words 'light and darkness,' which are here applied to the Deity in a manner which is not usual in the Bible, remind us of the technical terms used by the Persian Magi, and afterward by the Manicheans. It is true, that in the Bible we meet with the expressions 'works of the light,' 'children of the light,' 'to walk in the light,' and others of the same kind; but in these instances the term 'light' is not synonymous to 'holiness;' works of the light denoting nothing more than works which no man need be ashamed to perform openly, and in the face of the whole world. This explanation of the word 'light,' is inapplicable in the proposition 'God is light,' because there would be an impropriety in representing God either as fearing, or not fearing, to act in the face of the whole world. St. John, therefore, uses the term 'light' as equivalent to holiness.

"Now, the Gnostics admitted that the Supreme Being was perfectly holy and pure light; but they denied that the Supreme Being was the God, whom the Jews and the Christians worshipped. For the Jews and the Christians worshipped the Creator of the world; and the Gnostics asserted, that the Creator of the world was either a spirit of darkness; or, if He was a spirit of light, that He was not free from darkness.

"From ch. ii. 23. where St. John says, that he who denies the Son, rejects also the Father, it appears that his adversaries did not deny the Father in positive terms; since the apostle argues only that they virtually did so, by denying the Son. Now, the Gnostics did not positively deny the Father of Christ, whom they allowed to be the Supreme Being, but then they did not allow that He was the Creator. The terms, therefore, 'God' and the 'Father of Christ,' though they denote in reality the same Person, must not be considered as having precisely the same import; since the adversaries of St. John admitted, that the Father of Christ was the Supreme Being, and pure light; but denied that the Creator, who is in fact God, was light without darkness.

"4. In some places, especially ch. iv. 2, 3. St. John opposes false teachers of another description, namely, those who denied that Christ was come in the flesh. Now they who denied this were not Cerinthians, but another kind of Gnostics, called Docetes. For as, on the one hand, Cerinthus maintained that Jesus was a mere, and therefore real man, the Docetes, on the other hand, contended, that He was an incorporeal phantom, in which the Æon, Christ, or Divine nature, presented itself to mankind, ch. i. 1. 'Our hands have handled,' appears likewise to be opposed to this error of the Docetes.

"The doctrines which St. John has delivered in this Epistle, he has not supported either by arguments drawn from reason, or by quotations from the Old Testament: for neither of them are necessary, since the bare assertion of an apostle of Christ is sufficient authority. It is true, that in one respect this Epistle has less energy than St. John's Gospel; because in his Gospel he warrants his doctrines by the speeches of Christ. But then, on the other hand, St. John declares, in this Epistle, ch. iii. 24. iv. 4. v. 14, 16. that God sent His Spirit to the apostolic church, and heard their prayers. And it is evident that St. John alludes to the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, and to the miraculous powers obtained by prayer.

"The close of this Epistle, 'keep yourselves from idols,' has no immediate connexion with the preceding discourse. I am, therefore, in doubt, whether St. John meant to warn his readers against taking part in heathen sacrifices, which was allowed by these Gnostics, who are called Ni-colaitans in the Apocalypse; or, whether he meant to describe the system of the Gnostics in general as a system of idolatry, which, in fact, it was."

Dr. Macknight has some judicious observations on the authenticity of this Epistle, from the similarity of the style to that of the Gospel of John.

"The authenticity of any ancient writing is established, first, by the testimony of contemporary and succeeding authors, whose works have come down to us; and who speak of that writing as known to be the work of the person whose name it bears. Secondly, by the suitableness of the things contained in such writing, to the character and circumstances of its supposed author; and by the similarity of its style to the style of the other acknowledged writings of that author. The former of these proofs is called the external evidence of the authenticity of a writing; the latter, its internal evidence. When these two kinds of evidence are found accompanying any writing, they render its genuineness indubitable.

"The external evidence of the authenticity of John's First Epistle has been amply detailed by Dr. Lardner, who shows that the earliest and best Christian writers have, all with one consent, and without any hesitation, ascribed the First Epistle to him. And their testimony is confirmed by this circumstance, that the Syriac translator, who omitted the Second Epistle of Peter, the Second and Third Epistles of John, and the Epistle of Jude, because some doubts were entertained concerning them in the first age, or perhaps because they had not come to his knowledge; has translated John's First Epistle, as an apostolical writing, of which there never was any doubt in that nor in any other Christian church.

"In this Preface, therefore, we shall state the internal evidence of the authenticity of John's First Epistle, by showing—first, that in respect of its matter;—and, secondly, in respect of its style, it is perfectly suitable to the character and circumstances of its supposed author. In respect of the matter or subject of the Epistle under consideration, the writer of it has discovered himself to be John the apostle, by introducing a number of sentiments and expressions found in the Gospel, which all Christians, from the beginning, have acknowledged to be the work of John the apostle.

Epistle.	Gospel.
Chap. i. 1. That which was from the beginning—ὁ ἐθεασαμεθα, which we have contemplated, concerning the living word.	Chap. i. 1. In the beginning was the word—ver. 14. And ἐθεασαμεθα, we beheld his glory—ver. 4. In him was light—ver. 14. The word was made flesh.
Chap. ii. 5. Whosoever keepeth his word truly, in that man the love of God is perfected.	Chap. xiv. 23. If a man love me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him.
Chap. ii. 6. He who saith he abideth in him, ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.—See chap. iii. 24. iv. 13—16.	Chap. xv. 4. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bring forth fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me.
Chap. ii. 8. I write to you a new commandment.	Chap. xiii. 34. A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another, as I have loved you.
Chap. iii. 11. This is the message which ye heard from the beginning, that ye should love one another.
Chap ii. 8. The darkness passeth away, and the light which is true now shineth.	Chap. i. 5. The light shineth in darkness.
Ver. 10. Abideth in the light, and there is no stumbling-block to him.	Ver. 9. That was the true light.
	Chap. xi. 10. If a man walk in the night he stumbleth, because there is no light in him.

Epistle.	Gospel.
Chap. ii. 13. Young children, I write to you, because ye have known the Father.	Chap. vii. 3. This is the eternal life, that they might know thee, the only true God,
Ver. 14. Because ye have known him from the beginning.	And Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent.
Chap. ii. 8, 9. Every one who worketh righteousness is begotten of God.—See also ch. iii. 9. and v. 1.	Chap. iii. 3. Except a man be begotten again—ver. 5. Except a man be begotten of water and of the Spirit.
Chap. iii. 1. Behold how great love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God!	Chap. i. 12. To them he gave power to become the sons of God, even to them who believe on his name.
Chap. iii. 2. We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is.	Chap. xvii. 24. Be with me where I am that they may behold my glory.
Chap. iii. 8. He who worketh sin, is of the devil: for the devil sinneth from the beginning.	Chap. viii. 44. Ye are of your father the devil; he was a murderer from the beginning.
Chap. iii. 13. Do not wonder, my brethren, that the world hateth you.	Chap. xv. 20. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you.
Chap. iv. 9. By this the love of God was manifested, that God sent his Son, the only begotten, into the world, that we might live through him.	Chap. iii. 16. God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have eternal life.
Chap. iv. 12. No man hath seen God at any time.	Chap. i. 18. No man hath seen God at any time.
Chap. v. 13. These things I have written to you, who believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life; and that ye may believe in the name of the Son of God.	Chap. xx. 31. These things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name.
Chap. v. 14. If we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us.	Chap. xiv. 14. If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it.
Chap. v. 20. The Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life.	Chap. xvii. 2. Thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he might give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him—ver. 3. And this is the eternal life, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.

"From the above comparison of the First Epistle of John with his Gospel, there appears such an exact agreement of sentiment in the two writings, that no reader, who is capable of discerning what is peculiar in an author's turn of thinking, can entertain the least doubt of their being the productions of one and the same writer. Further, since John has not mentioned his own name in his Gospel, the want of his name in the Epistle is no proof that it was not written by him; but rather a presumption that it is his; especially as he has sufficiently discovered himself to be an apostle, by affirming in the beginning of the Epistle that he was an eye and an ear witness of the things he has written concerning the living Word.

"The style of this Epistle being the same with the style of the Gospel of John, it is, by that internal mark likewise, denoted to be his writing. In his Gospel, John does not content himself with simply affirming or denying a thing; but, to strengthen his affirmation, he denies the contrary. In like manner, to strengthen his denial of a thing, he affirms its contrary.—See John i. 20. iii. 36. v. 22. The same manner of expressing things strongly, is found in this Epistle: for example, ch. ii. 4. 'He who saith, I have known him, and doth not keep his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him.' Ver. 27. 'The same unction teacheth you concerning all things, and is truth, and is no lie.' Ch. iv. 2. 'Every spirit which confesseth that Jesus Christ hath come in the flesh, is from God.' Ver. 3. 'And every spirit which doth not confess that Jesus Christ hath come in the flesh, is not from God.

"In his Gospel likewise, John, to express things emphatically, frequently uses the demonstrative pronoun this. Ch. i. 19. Αυτη, This is the testimony. Chap. iii. 19. Αυτη, This is the condemnation, that light, &c. Chap. vi. 29. Τϐτο, This is the work of God. Ver. 30. Τϐτο, This is the will of him. Ver. 50. Ουτος, This is the bread which cometh down from heaven. Chap. xvii. 3. Αυτη, This is the eternal life. In the Epistle the same emphatical manner of expression is found, ch. i. 5. ii. 25. This is the promise. Chap. iii. 23. Αυτη, This is the commandment. Chap. v. 3. Αυτη, This is the love of God. Ver. 4. This is the victory. Ver. 6. Ουτος, This is he who came by water. Ver. 14. Αυτη, This is the boldness which we have with him.

"Such is the internal evidence on which all Christians, from the beginning, have received the First Epistle of John, as really written by him, and of Divine authority, although his name is not mentioned in the inscription, nor in any part of the Epistle."

On the term Epistle, as applied to this work of St. John, it may be necessary to make a few remarks. There is properly nothing of the epistolary style in this work: it is addressed neither to any particular person, nor to any church.

The writer does not mention himself either in the beginning or ending; and, although this can be no objection against its authenticity, yet it is some proof that the work was never intended to be considered in the light of an Epistle.

1. Is it a tract, or dissertation, upon the more sublime parts of Christianity? 2. Is it a polemical discourse against heretics, particularly the Gnostics, or some of their teachers, who were disturbing the churches where John dwelt? 3. Is it a sermon, the subject of which is God's love to man in the mission of Jesus Christ; from which our obligations to love and serve Him are particularly inferred? 4. Or is it a collection of Christian aphorisms, made by John himself; and put together as they occurred to his mind, without any intended order or method? Much might be said on all these heads of inquiry; and the issue would be that the idea of its being an epistle of any kind, must be relinquished; and yet epistle is its general denomination through all antiquity.

It is a matter, however, of little importance, what its title may be, or to what species of literary composition it belongs; while we know that it is the genuine work of St. John; of the holiest man who ever breathed: of one who was most intimately acquainted with the doctrine and mind of his Lord; of one who was admitted to the closest fellowship with his Saviour; and who has treated of the deepest things that can be experienced or comprehended in the Christian life.

As to distinct heads of discourse, it does not appear to me that any were intended by the apostle; he wrote just as the subjects occurred to his mind; or rather as the Holy Spirit gave him utterance: and, although technical order is not here to be expected, yet nothing like disorder or confusion can be found in the whole work.

As professor Michaelis has considered it in the light of a polemical treatise, written against the Gnostics, and other false teachers of that time, I have thought it right to give his view of the work considered in this light; but as I, in general, pursue another plan of interpretation in the Notes, I have inserted his elucidations in the preceding pages of this Preface.

On the controverted text of The Three heavenly Witnesses I have said what truth, and a deep and thorough examination of the subject, has obliged me to say. I am satisfied that it is not genuine; though the doctrine in behalf of which it has been originally introduced into the Epistle is a doctrine of the highest importance, and most positively revealed in various parts both of the Old and New Testament. The stress which has been laid on the testimony of this text, in behalf of the doctrine of the Trinity, has done much evil; for, when its own authenticity has come to be critically examined, and has been found to rest on no sure foundation, the adversaries of the doctrine itself have thought they had full cause for triumph; and have, in effect, said, "If this text be to the Epistle and to the doctrine in question, what the sun is in the world, what the heart is in man, and what the needle is in the mariner's compass, then the doctrine is spurious, for the text is a most manifest forgery." I would just observe, that incautious or feeble defences of any doctrine do not affect the doctrine itself, but in the view of superficial minds. The proof that this text is an interpolation which, first existing as an illustrative marginal note, has afterward been unfortunately introduced into the text, has "demolished no strong-hold of the orthodox; has taken away no pillar from the Christan faith." The grand defences of the doctrine of the Trinity, brought down to us from the highest Christian antiquity, stand still in all their force: not one of them was built upon this text, because the text, as a supposed part of St. John's work, did not then exist; therefore neither evidence, prop, nor pillar, of the grand doctrine, is injured. We have what we ever had in this respect; and we may make the same illustrating use of the words in reference to this doctrine, which many Latin writers, since the time of St. Cyprian, made; and which was proper enough in its own place, but became useless when incorporated with the sure sayings of God.

No man, it is hoped, will be so obstinate, perverse, or disingenuous, as to say, or insinuate, that the man who gives up this text is unsound in the faith: it would be as reasonable to assert, on the other hand, that he who understands the mass of evidence that is against the authenticity of this verse, and who nevertheless will contend for its continuance in the Sacred Canon, is a Deist in his heart: and endeavours to discredit the truth, by mixing it with error and falsehood. Those whose doubts are not removed by the dissertation at the end of this Epistle, had best read the late Professor Porson's Answer to Dean Travis; where, it is presumed, they will receive the fullest satisfaction.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. That which was from the beginning] That glorious Personage JESUS CHRIST the LORD, who was from eternity; and being manifested in the flesh, we have heard proclaim the doctrine of eternal life; with our own eyes have we seen him, not transiently, for we have looked upon him frequently; and our hands have handled, frequently touched His Person: and have had every proof of the identity and reality of this glorious Being, that our senses of hearing, ὁ ακηκοαμεν; seeing, ὁ εωρακαμεν τοις οφθαλμοις ημων; and feeling, και αι χειρες ημων εψηλαφησαν, could possibly require.

Verse 2. (For the life was manifested] The Lord Jesus, who is the Creator of all things, and the Fountain of life to all sentient and intellectual beings, and from whom eternal life and happiness come, was manifested in the flesh; and we have seen Him, and in consequence bear witness to Him as the Fountain and Author of eternal life: for He who was from eternity with the Father, was manifested unto us, His apostles, and to the whole of the Jewish nation; and preached that doctrine of eternal life which I have before delivered to the world in my gospel; and which I now farther confirm by this Epistle.

Verse 3. That which we have seen and heard] We deliver nothing by hearsay; nothing by tradition; nothing from conjecture: we have had the fullest certainty of all that we write and preach.

That ye also may have fellowship with us] That ye may be preserved from all false doctrine; and have a real participation with us, apostles, of the grace, peace, love, and life of God; which communion we have with God the Father, who hath loved us, and given His Son Jesus Christ to redeem us: and with his Son Jesus Christ, who laid down His life for the life of the world; and through whom, being God manifested in the flesh, we have union with God, are made partakers of the Divine Nature, and dwell in God, and God in us.

Verse 4. That your joy may be full.] Ye have already tasted that the Lord is good; but I am now going to show you the height of your Christian calling, that your happiness may be complete; being thoroughly cleansed from all sin, and filled with the fulness of God.

Verse 5. This then is the message] This is the grand principle on which all depends; which we have heard of, απ' αυτου, FROM him: for neither Moses nor the prophets ever gave that full instruction concerning God, and communion with Him, which Jesus Christ has given: for the only begotten Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, has alone declared the fulness of the truth, and the extent of the blessings which believers on Him are to receive: see John i. 18.

from Him wisdom, knowledge, holiness, and happiness, are received by every believing soul. This is the grand message of the gospel; the great principle on which the happiness of man depends. LIGHT implies every essential excellence; especially wisdom, holiness, and happiness. DARKNESS implies all imperfection; and principally ignorance, sinfulness, and misery. LIGHT is the purest, the most subtile, the most useful, and the most diffusive, of all God's creatures; it is, therefore, a very proper emblem of the purity, perfection, and goodness, of the Divine Nature. God is to human souls what the light is to the world: without the latter, all would be dismal and uncomfortable; and terror and death would universally prevail: and, without an indwelling God, what is religion? Without His all-penetrating and diffusive light, what is the soul of man? Religion would be an empty science, a dead letter; a system unauthoritated, and uninfluencing: and the soul, a trackless wilderness; a howling waste; full of evil, of terror, and dismay; and ever racked with realizing anticipations of future, successive, permanent, substantial, and endless misery. No wonder the apostle lays this down as a first and grand principle; stating it to be the essential message which he had received from Christ to deliver to the world.

Verse 6. If we say that we have fellowship] Having fellowship, κοινωνια, communion with God, necessarily implies a partaking of the Divine Nature. Now, if a man profess to have such communion, and walk in darkness, live an irreligious and sinful life, he lies in the profession which he makes; and does not the truth, does not walk according to the directions of the gospel, on the grace of which he holds his relation to God, and his communion with Him.

The Gnostics, against whose errors it is supposed this Epistle was written, were great pretenders to knowledge, to the highest degrees of the Divine illumination, and the nearest communion with the Fountain of holiness, while their manners were excessively corrupt.

Verse 7. But if we walk in the light] If, having received the principle of holiness from Him, we live a holy and righteous life, deriving continual light, power, and life from Him, then we have fellowship one with another; that is, we have communion with God, and God condescends to hold communion with us. This appears to be the intention of the apostle; and so he was understood by some Versions and MSS. which, instead of μετ' αλληλων, with each other, have μετ' αυτου, with him. Those who are deeply experienced in Divine things, converse with God, and God with them.—What John says is no figure: God and a holy heart are in continual correspondence.

The blood of Jesus Christ] The meritorious efficacy of His passion and death, has purged our consciences from dead works; and cleaseth us, καθαριζει ημας, continues to cleanse us; i. e. to keep clean what He has made clean; for it requires the same merit and energy to preserve holiness in the soul of man, as to produce it: or as several MSS. and some Versions read, καθαριει, and καθαρισει, will cleanse; speaking of those who are already justified, and are expecting full redemption in His blood.

And being cleansed from all sin is what every believer should look for, what he has a right to expect, and what he must have in this life, in order to be prepared to meet his God; Christ is not a partial Saviour; He saves to the uttermost, and He cleanses from ALL sin.

Verse 8. If we say that we have no sin] This is tantamount to ver. 10. If we say that we have not sinned. All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; and, therefore, every man needs a Saviour, such as Christ is. It is very likely that the heretics, against whose evil doctrines the apostle writes, denied that they had any sin, or needed any Saviour. Indeed, the Gnostics even denied that Christ suffered; the Æon, or Divine being that dwelt in the man Christ Jesus, according to them, left Him when He was taken by the Jews; and He, being but a common man, His sufferings and death had neither merit nor efficacy.

We deceive ourselves] By supposing that we have no guilt, no sinfulness; and, consequently, have no need of the blood of Christ as an atoning sacrifice; this is the most dreadful of all deceptions, as it leaves the soul under all the guilt and pollution of sin; exposed to hell, and utterly unfit for heaven.

The truth is not in us.] We have no knowledge of the gospel of Jesus; the whole of which is founded on this most awful truth—all have sinned; all are guilty; all are unholy; and none can recover himself. Hence, it was necessary that Jesus Christ should become incarnated, and suffer, and die, to bring men to God.

Verse 9. If we confess our sins] If, from a deep sense of our guilt, impurity, and helplessness, we humble ourselves before God, acknowledging our iniquity, His holiness, and our own utter helplessness, and implore mercy for His sake who has died for us: He is faithful, because to such He has promised mercy, Psa. xxxii. 5. Prov. xxviii. 13. and just, for Christ has died for us, and thus made an atonement to the Divine Justice; so that God can now be just, and yet the Justifier of him who believeth in Jesus.

And to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.] Not only to forgive the sin, but to purify the heart.

Observe here—1. Sin exists in the soul after two modes or forms: 1. in guilt, which requires forgiveness, or pardon; 2. in pollution, which requires cleansing.

2. Guilt, to be forgiven, must be confessed; and pollution, to be cleansed, must be also confessed. In order to find mercy, a man must know and feel himself to be a sinner, that he may fervently apply to God for pardon. In order to get a clean heart, a man must know and feel its depravity, acknowledge and deplore it before God, in order to be fully sanctified.

3. Few are pardoned, because they do not feel and confess their sins: and few are sanctified or cleansed from all sin, because they do not feel and confess their own sore, and the plague of their hearts.

4. As the blood of Jesus Christ, the merit of His passion and death, applied by faith, purges the conscience from all dead works; so the same cleanses the heart from all unrighteousness.

5. As all unrighteousness is sin; so he that is cleansed from all unrighteousness is cleansed from all sin. To attempt to evade this, and plead for the continuance of sin in the heart, through life, is ungrateful, wicked, and even blasphemous: for, as he who says he has not sinned, ver. 10, makes God a liar, who has declared the contrary through every part of His revelation; so he that says the blood of Christ either cannot or will not cleanse us from all sin in this life, gives also the lie to his Maker, who has declared the contrary; and thus shows that the word, the doctrine of God, is not in him.

Reader, it is the birthright of every child of God to be cleansed from all sin, to keep himself unspotted from the world, and so to live as never more to offend his Maker. All things are possible to him that believeth; because all things are possible to the infinitely meritorious blood, and energetic Spirit, of the Lord Jesus.—See the Notes on the parallel passages in the margin; and particularly in St. John's Gospel, chap. 1.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. My little children] Τεκνια μου, my beloved children: the address of an affectionate father to children whom he tenderly loves. The term also refers to the apostle's authority as their spiritual father; and their obligation to obey as his spiritual children.

That ye sin not] This is the language of the whole Scripture; of every dispensation, ordinance, institution, doctrine, and word of God. Sin not; do not run into ruin: live not so as to promote your own misery: be happy, for it is the will of God that ye should be so: therefore, He wills that ye should be holy: holiness and happiness are inseparable; sin and misery are equally so.

And if any man sin] If, through ignorance, inexperience, the violence of temptation, unwatchfulness, &c. ye have fallen into sin, and grieved the Spirit of God, do not continue in the sin, nor under the guilt; do not despair of being again restored to the favour of God: your case, it is true, is deeply deplorable, but not desperate; there is still hope, for—

We have an advocate with the Father] We still have Him before the throne who died for our offences, and rose again for our justification; and there He makes intercession for us. He is the righteous; He who suffered the JUST for the unjust, that He might bring us to God. Do not, therefore, despair, but have immediate recourse to God through Him.

Verse 2. And he is the propitiation] Ἱλασμος, the atoning sacrifice for our sins. This is the proper sense of the word, as used in the Septuagint, where it often occurs; and is the translation of אשם asham, an oblation for sin, Amos viii. 14. חטאת chatath, a sacrifice for sin, Ezek. xliv. 27. כפור kippur, an atonement, Numb. v. 8.—See the Note on Rom. iii. 25. and particularly the Note on Luke xviii. 13. The word is used only here, and in chap. iv. 10.

And not for our's only] It is not for us apostles that He has died, nor exclusively for the Jewish people, but περι ὁλου του κοσμου, for the whole world, Gentiles as well as Jews: all the descendants of Adam. The apostle does not say that He died for any select part of the inhabitants of the earth, or for some out of every nation, tribe, or kindred, but for ALL MANKIND: and the attempt to limit this is a violent outrage against God and His word.

For the meaning of the word παρακλητος, which we here translate advocate, see the Note on John xiv. 16.

From these verses we learn that a poor backslider need not despair of again finding mercy: this passage holds out sufficient encouragement for his hope. There is scarcely another such in the Bible; and why? That sinners might not presume on the mercy of God. And why this one? That no backslider might utterly despair. Here, then, is a guard against presumption on the one hand, and despondency on the other.

Verse 3. And hereby we do know that we know him] If we keep the commandments of God, loving Him with all our heart, and our neighbour as ourselves, we have the fullest proof that we have the true saving knowledge of God and His Christ. The Gnostics pretended to much knowledge, but their knowledge left them in possession of all their bad passions, and unholy habits; they, therefore, gave no proof that they had known either God or his Son Jesus: nor is any man properly acquainted with God, who is still under the power of his sins.

Verse 4. He that saith, I know him] This is a severe blow against those false teachers, and against all pretenders to religious knowledge, who live under the power of their sins; and against all Antinomians, and false boasters in the righteousness of Christ, as a covering for their personal unholiness. They are all liars, and no truth of God is in them.

Verse 5. But whoso keepeth his word] Conscientiously observes his doctrine, the spirit and letter of the religion of Christ.

Is the love of God perfected] The design of God's love in sending Jesus Christ into the world to die for the sin of man is τετελειωται, accomplished, in that man who receives the doctrine, and applies for the salvation provided for him. This seems to be the meaning of the apostle.

A. M. cir. 4073. A. D. cir. 69. Impp. Galba, Othone, Vitel. et Vespasiano.

That we are in him.] That we have entered into His Spirit and views, received His salvation, have been enabled to walk in the light, and have communion with Him by the Holy Spirit.

Verse 6. Abideth in him] He who not only professes to have known Christ, but also that he has communion with Him, and abides in His favour, should prove the truth of his profession, by walking as Christ walked; living a life of devotion and obedience to God, and of benevolence and beneficence to his neighbour. Thus Christ walked; and He has left us an example that we should follow his steps.

To be in Christ, ver. 5, is to be converted to the Christian faith, and to have received the remission of sins. To abide in Christ, ver. 6, is to continue in that state of salvation, growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Verse 7. Brethren, I write no new commandment] There seems a contradiction between this and the next verse. But the apostle appears to speak not so much of any difference in the essence of the precept itself, but in reference to the degrees of light and grace belonging to the Mosaic and Christian dispensations. It was ever the command of God that men should receive His light, walk by that light, and love Him and one another. But this commandment was renewed by Christ with much latitude and spirituality of meaning; and also with much additional light to see its extent, and grace to observe it. It may, therefore, be called the OLD commandment, which was from the beginning; and also a NEW commandment revealed afresh, and illustrated by Christ, with the important addition to the meaning of Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye shall love the brethren so as to lay down your lives for each other.—See the Note on John xiii. 34.

Instead of αδελφοι, brethren, ABC. thirteen others, with both the Syriac, Erpen's Arabic, Coptic, Sahidic, Armenian, Slavonic, and Vulgate, with several of the Fathers, have αγαπητοι, beloved. This is, without doubt, the true reading.

Verse 8. Which thing is true in him and in you] It is true that Christ loved the world so well as to lay down His life for it: and it was true in them, in all his faithful followers at that time, who were ready to lay down their lives for the testimony of Jesus. There is a saying in Synopsis, Sohar, p. 94. n. 51. that may cast some light on this passage—That way in which the just have walked, although it be OLD, yet may be said to be NEW in the love of the righteous. The love that the righteous bear to God and to each other is a renewal of the commandment.

The darkness is past] The total thick darkness of the Heathen world, and the comparative darkness of the Mosaic dispensation, are now passing away; and the pure and superior light of Christianity is now diffusing its beams every where. He does not say that the darkness was all gone by, but παραγεται, it is passing away: he does not say that the fulness of the light had appeared, but ηδη φαινει, it is now shining; and will shine more and more to the perfect day: for, the darkness passes away in proportion as the light shines and increases.

Verse 9. He that saith he is in the light] He that professes to be a convert to Christianity, even in the lowest degree—and hateth his brother; not only does not love him, but wills and does him evil, as the Jews did the Gentiles—is in darkness; has received no saving knowledge of the truth; and, whatever he may pretend, is in Heathen ignorance, or even worse than Heathen ignorance, to the present time, notwithstanding the clear shining of the light of the gospel.

Verse 10. He that loveth his brother] That is, his neighbour, his fellow-creature, whether Jew or Gentile, so as to bear him continual good will, and to be ready to do him every kind office: Abideth in the light; not only gives proof that he has received Christ Jesus the Lord, but that he walks in Him, that he retains the grace of his justification, and grows therein.

And there is none occasion of stumbling in him.] Και σκανδαλον εν αυτω ουκ εστι, and there is no stumbling-block light, and [a] there is none [b] occasion of stumbling in him.

11 But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and [c] walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

12 I write unto you, little children, because [d] your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake.

13 I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him [e] that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father.

[a] 2 Pet. 1. 10.——[b] Gr. scandal.——[c] John 12. 35.——[d] Luke 24. 47. Acts 4. 12. & 10. 43. & 13. 38. Ch. 1. 7.——[e] Ch. 1. 1.

in him; he neither gives nor receives offence: love prevents him from giving any to his neighbour, and love prevents him from receiving any from his neighbour, because it leads him to put the best construction on every thing. Besides, as he walks in the light, he sees the stumbling-blocks that are in the way, and avoids them; every part of his path being illuminated. Many fall into sin because they do not see the snares that are in their way; and they do not see the snares because they either have not received, or do not abide in the light.

Verse 11. But he that hateth his brother is in darkness] He is still in his heathen or unconverted state: and walketh in darkness; his conduct being a proof of that state—and knoweth not whither he goeth; having no proper knowledge of God or eternal things; and cannot tell whether he is going to heaven or hell—because that darkness has blinded his eyes; darkened his whole soul, mind, and heart.

Verse 12. I write unto you, little children] Τεκνια, beloved children; see on ver. 1. those who were probably the apostle's own converts: and members of the church, over which he presided. But it may be applied to young converts in general; those who can call God Abba, Father, by the Holy Spirit: therefore, he says of them, that their sins were forgiven them for His name's sake; i. e. on account of Jesus, the Saviour, who had died for them, and was now their Mediator at the right hand of God.

Verse 13. I write unto you, fathers] By fathers it is very likely that the apostle means persons who had embraced Christianity on its first promulgation in Judea, and in the Lesser Asia; some of whom had probably seen Christ in the flesh; for this appears to be what is meant by, Ye have known him from the beginning. These were the elders, and eyewitnesses, who were of the longest standing in the church, and well established in the truths of the gospel and in Christian experience. But τον απ' αρχης, him who is from the beginning, may mean Jesus Christ in the eternity of His nature; see John i. 1, 2. but the sense is the same.

I write unto you, young men] These were confirmed disciples of Christ; persons who were well grounded in the truth; had been thoroughly exercised in the Christian warfare; were no longer agitated by doubts and fears, but had arrived at the abiding testimony of the Spirit of God in their consciences: hence they are said to have overcome the wicked one, ver. 14. They were persons in the prime of life, and in the zenith of their faith and love.

I write unto you, little children] Παιδια, a very different term from that used in the 12th verse, τεκνια, which means beloved children, as we have already seen. This is another class, and their state is differently described: ye have known the Father. If the apostle does not use these two words indifferently, four states instead of three, are here described:—

1. Fathers, those who had been converted at the very commencement of Christianity, and had seen the eternal Word manifested in the flesh.

2. Young Men, νεανισκοι, youths in the prime of their spiritual life, valiant soldiers, fighting under the banner of Christ, who had confounded Satan in his wiles, and overcome him by the blood of the Lamb.

3. Little Children, παιδια, disciples of Christ, not of very long standing in the church, nor of much experience; but who had known the Father: i. e. persons, who being made sons, God had sent the Spirit of His Son into their hearts, whereby they cried Abba, Father!

4. Beloved Children, τεκνια, the most recent converts; and particularly those among young men and women, who, from their youth, simplicity, open-heartedness, and affectionate attachment to God and His cause, were peculiarly dear to this aged apostle of Jesus Christ. These are represented as having their sins forgiven them on account of His name, δια το ονομα αυτου, that is, for the sake of Jesus; or, on account of His merit or worthiness.

These four classes constituted the household or family of God: each class, in ascending gradation, seems to have had more light, experience, and holiness, than the other. 1. The τεκνια, beloved children, or infants, are those who are just born into the heavenly family. 2. The παιδια, little children, are those who are able to walk and speak; they know their heavenly Father; and can call Him by that name. 3. The young men, νεανισκοι, are such as are grown up to man's estate; these perform the most difficult part of the labour, and are called to fight the battles of the Lord. 4. The fathers, πατερες, are those who are at the foundation of the spiritual family, and have known the whole economy of the work of God in themselves and in others. These have the largest stock of spiritual wisdom, and religious experience. All these answer to the component members of a perfect human family. 1. There is the beloved infant, dandled on the knees of its parents. 2. There are the little children that can speak a little, run about, answer to their own names, distinguish and call on their father and mother; and are now put under instruction. 3. There are the youths, those who are grown up to man's estate, are strong to labour, retain the instructions they have received, act upon them; and are occasionally called upon to defend their family, property, and country, against spoilers and oppressors. 4. There are the parents, the father and mother, from whom the family sprang; and who are the governors and directors of the household. To these four classes, in a perfect family, the apostle appears to allude: and we see, considered in this light, with what delicacy and propriety he uses these images.

Verse 14. The word of God abideth in you] Ye have not only thoroughly known and digested the Divine doctrine, but your hearts are moulded into it: ye know it to be the truth of God, from the power and happiness with which it inspires you; and from the constant abiding testimony of the spirit of that truth, which lives and witnesses wherever that truth lives and predominates.

Verse 15. Love not the world] Though these several classes were so well acquainted with Divine things, and had all tasted the powers of the world to come; yet, so apt are men to be drawn aside by sensible things, that the Holy Spirit saw it necessary to caution these against the love of the world, the inordinate desire of earthly things. Covetousness is the predominant vice of old age: Ye fathers, love not the world. The things which are in the world, its profits, pleasures, and honours, have the strongest allurements for youth; therefore, ye young men, little children, and babes, love not the things of this world. Let those hearts abide faithful to God, who have taken Him for their portion.

The love of the Father is not in him] The love of God, and the love of earthly things are incompatible. If you give place to the love of the world, the love of God cannot dwell in you: and if you have not His love, you can have no peace, no holiness, no heaven.

Verse 16. For all that is in the world] All that it can boast of, all that it can promise, is only sensual transient gratification: and even this promise it cannot fulfil; so that its warmest votaries can complain loudest of their disappointment.

The lust of the flesh] Sensual and impure desires, which seek their gratification in women, strong drink, delicious viands, and the like.

Lust of the eye] Inordinate desires after finery of every kind: gaudy dress, splendid houses, superb furniture, expensive equipage, trappings and decorations of all sorts.

Pride of life] Hunting after honours, titles, and pedigrees. Boasting of ancestry, family connexions, great offices, honourable acquaintance, and the like.

Is not of the Father] Nothing of these inordinate attachments either comes from, or leads to, God. They are of this world; here they begin, flourish, and end. They deprave the mind, divert it from Divine pursuits, and render it utterly incapable of spiritual enjoyments.

Verse 17. The world passeth away] All these things are continually fading and perishing; and the very state in which they are possessed is changing perpetually; and the earth and its works will be shortly burnt up.

And the lust thereof] The men of this world, their vain pursuits, and delusive pleasures, are passing away in their successive generations; and their very memory perishes: but he that doeth the will of God, that seeks the pleasure, profit, and honour, that come from above, shall abide for ever; always happy, through time and eternity; because God, the unchangeable source of felicity, is his portion.

Verse 18. Little children, it is the last time] This place is variously understood. This is the last dispensation of grace and mercy to mankind: the present age is the con- clusion of the Jewish state, as the temple and holy city are shortly to be destroyed. But as there are many who suppose that this Epistle was written after the destruction of Jerusalem; consequently, the words cannot, on that supposition, refer to this. Others think that εσχατη ωρα should be translated a most difficult, perilous, and wretched time; a time in which all kinds of vices, heresies, and pollutions, shall have their full reign; that time which our Lord predicted, Matt. vii. 15. when He said, Beware of false prophets, xxiv. 11, 12. Many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many; and because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. And, verse 24. There shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders. And, verse 25. Behold, I have told you before. Now the apostle may allude to these predictions of our Lord: but all these refer to a time antecedent to the destruction of Jerusalem. I am therefore inclined to think, whatever may be here the precise meaning of the last time, that the Epistle before us was written while Jerusalem yet stood. See what is said in the Preface on this head.

Antichrist shall come] Who is this Αντιχριστος, Antichrist? Is he the emperor Domitian, the Gnostics, Nicolaitans, Nazareans, Cerinthians, Romish Pontiffs, &c. &c.? Ans. Any person, thing, doctrine, system of religion, polity, &c. which is opposed to Christ, and to the spirit and spread of His gospel, is antichrist. We need not look for this imaginary being in any of the above exclusively. Even Protestantism may have its antichrist as well as Popery. Every man who opposes the spirit of the gospel, and every teacher and writer who endeavours to lower the gospel standard to the spirit and taste of the world, is a genuine antichrist, no matter where, or among whom, he is found. The heresies which sprang up in the days of St. John were the antichrist of that time. As there has been a succession of oppositions to Christianity, in its spirit and spread, through every age since its promulgation in the world; so there has been a succession of antichrists. We may bring this matter much lower: every enemy of Christ, every one who opposes His reign in the world, in others, or in himself, is an antichrist: and, consequently, every wicked man is an antichrist. But the name has been generally applied to whatever person, or thing, systematically opposes Christ and His religion.

Many antichrists] Many false prophets, false Messiahs, heretics, and corrupters of the Truth.

Whereby we know that it is the last time.] That time which our Lord has predicted; and of which he has warned us.

Verse 19. They went out from us] These heretics had belonged to our Christian assemblies; they professed Christianity, and do so still: but we, apostles, did not commission them to preach to you, for they have disgraced the Divine doctrine with the most pernicious opinions; they have given up, or explained away, its most essential principles; they have mingled the rest with Heathenish rites and Jewish glosses. While, therefore, we acknowledge that they once belonged to us, we assert that they are not of us. They are not Christians; we abhor their conduct and their creed. We never sent them to teach.

They were not of us] For a considerable time before they left our assemblies, they gave proofs that they had departed from the faith; for if they had been of us, if they had been apostles, and continued in the firm belief of the Christian doctrines, they would not have departed from us to form a sect of themselves.

That they were not all of us.] They were not expelled from the Christian Church; they were not sent out by us; but they separated from it and us. None of them had been inspired as we apostles were, though they pretended to a very high teaching; but their separating from us manifested that they were not taught, as we were, by the Spirit of God. These false teachers probably drew many sincere souls away with them: and to this it is probable the apostle alludes, when he says, they were not ALL of us. Some were; others were not.

Verse 20. But ye have an unction] The word χρισμα signifies not an unction, but an ointment; the very thing itself by which anointing is effected; and so it was properly rendered in our former translations. Probably this is an allusion to the holy anointing oil of the law, and to Psa. xlv. 7. God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness. He hath given thee the plenitude of the Spirit, which none of thy fellows, none of the prophets, ever received in such abundance. By this it is evident, that not only the gifts of the Spirit, but the Holy Spirit Himself, is intended. This Spirit dwelt at that time in a peculiar manner in the church, to teach apostles, teachers, and all the primitive believers, every thing requisite for their salvation; and to make them the instruments of handing down to posterity, that glorious system of truth which is contained in the New Testament. As oil was used among the Asiatics for the inauguration of persons into important offices; and this oil was acknowledged to be an emblem of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, without which the duties or those offices could not be discharged: so it is put here for the Spirit Himself, who presided in the church, and from which all gifts and graces flowed. The χρισμα, chrism, or ointment, here mentioned, is also an allusion to the holy anointing ointment prescribed by God Himself, Exod. xxx. 23—25, which was composed of fine myrrh, sweet cinnamon, sweet calamus, cassia lignea, and olive oil. This was an emblem of the gifts and graces of the Divine Spirit. See the Notes on the above place. And for the reason of this anointing, see the Note on Exod. xxix. 7.

Ye know all things.] Every truth of God necessary to your salvation, and the salvation of man in general: and have no need of that knowledge of which the Gnostics boast.

But although the above is the sense in which this verse is generally understood, yet there is reason to doubt its accuracy. The adjective παντα, which we translate all things, is most probably the accusative case singular, having ανθρωπον man, or some such substantive, understood. The verse, therefore, should be translated, Ye have an ointment from the Holy One, and ye know, or discern, EVERY MAN. This interpretation appears to be confirmed by των πλανωντων in ver. 26. those who are deceiving, or misleading, you; and in the same sense should παντων, ver. 27. be understood. But as the same anointing teacheth you παντων, not of all things, but of ALL MEN. It is plain, from the whole tenor of the Epistle, that St. John is guarding the Christians against seducers and deceivers, who were even then disturbing, and striving to corrupt the Church. In consequence of this, he desires them to try the spirits, whether they were of God, chap. iv. 1. But how were they to try them? Principally by that anointing, that spiritual light and discernment, which they had received from God; and also by comparing the doctrine of these men with what they had heard from the beginning. The anointing here mentioned seems to mean the spirit of illumination, or great knowledge and discernment in spiritual things. By this they could readily distinguish the false apostles from the true.

Verse 21. I have not written, &c.] It is not because ye are ignorant of these things that I write to you; but because you know them, and can by these judge of the doctrines of those false teachers, and clearly perceive that they are liars; for they contradict the truth which ye have already received, and consequently their doctrine is a lie; and no lie can be of the truth, i. e. consistent with Christianity.

Verse 22. Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ?] Here we see some of the false doctrines which were then propagated in the world. There were certain persons who, while they acknowledged Jesus to be a Divine Teacher, denied Him to be the Christ, i. e. the MESSIAH.

He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son.] He is antichrist who denies the supernatural and miraculous birth of Jesus Christ; who denies Jesus to be the Son of God; and who denies God to be the Father of the Lord Jesus:—thus, he denies the Father and the Son. The Jews in general, and the Gnostics in particular, denied the miraculous conception of Jesus: with both he was accounted no more than a common man, the son of Joseph and Mary. But the Gnostics held that a divine person, Æon, or angelical being, dwelt in him; but all things else relative to His miraculous generation and divinity they rejected. These were antichrists, who denied Jesus to be the Christ.

Verse 23. Whosoever denieth the Son] He who denies Jesus to be the Son of God, and consequently the Christ or Messiah, he hath not the Father, he can have no birth from above, he cannot be enrolled among the children of God; because none can be a child of God, but by faith in Christ Jesus.

He that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also.] This clause is printed by our translators in italics, to show it to be of doubtful authority, as it was probably wanting in the chief of those MSS. which they consulted; as it was in Coverdale's Bible, printed 1535; Tindal's Text, printed in 1548; and in all the early printed editions (which I have seen) previously to 1566; the Bible of Richard Cardmarden, printed in English at Rouen, where this clause is inserted in a different letter, between brackets. But that the clause is genuine, and should be restored to the Text without any mark of spuriousness, as I have done in the Text of this Work, is evident, from the authorities by which it is supported. It is found in ABC, and in between twenty and thirty others of the best authority; as also in both the Syriac, Erpen's Arabic, Coptic, Sahidic, Armenian, and Vulgate. It is also quoted as a part of the Text by Origen, Meletius, Athanasius, both the Cyrils, Theophylact, Vigilius of Tapsum, Pelagius, Cerealis, Cassian; and in substance by Euthalius, Epiphanius, Cyprian, Hilary, Faustinus, Lucifer of Cagliari, Augustin, and Bede. It is wanting in the Arabic, in the Polyglott, in a MS. in the Harleian library, and in some few others. It is doubtless genuine; and Griesbach has with propriety restored it to the Text, from which it never should have been separated.

Verse 24. Let that therefore abide in you] Continue in the doctrines concerning the incarnation, passion, death, resurrection, ascension, and intercession, of the Lord Jesus, which you have heard preached from the beginning, by us His apostles.

Ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father.] Ye who are preachers shall not only be acknowledged as ministers of the Church of Christ, but be genuine children of God, by faith in the Son of His love; and ye all thus continuing, shall have fellowship with the Father and with the Son.

Verse 25. This is the promise] God has promised eternal life to all who believe on Christ Jesus. So they who receive His doctrine, and continue in communion with the Father and the Son, shall have this eternal life.

Verse 26. These things have I written] Either meaning the whole Epistle, or what is contained in the preceding verses, from the beginning of the 18th to the end of the 25th.

Them that seduce you.] Περι των πλανωντων υμας, that is the deceivers that were among them; and who were labouring to pervert the followers of Christ.

Verse 27. But the anointing which ye have received] That ointment, the gifts of the Holy Spirit, mentioned ver. 20. where see the Note.

Ye need not that any man teach you] The Gnostics, who pretended to the highest illumination, could bring no proof that they were divinely taught; nor had they any thing in their teaching worthy the acceptance of the meanest Christian: therefore they had no need of that, nor of any other teaching; but that which the same anointing teacheth, the same Spirit from whom they had already received the light of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ. Whatever that taught, they needed; and whatever those taught, whose teaching was according to this Spirit, they needed. St. John does not say, that those who had once received the teaching of the Divine Spirit had no farther need of the ministry of the gospel:—no, but he says they had no need of such teaching as their false teachers proposed to them; nor of any other teaching that was different from that anointing, i. e. the teaching of the Spirit of God. No man, howsoever holy, wise, or pure, can ever be in such a state as to have no need of the gospel ministry; they who think so, give the highest proof that they have never yet learned of Christ, or His Spirit.

And is truth] Because it is the Spirit of truth. John xvi. 13.

And is no lie] It has nothing like the fables of the Gnostics. It can neither deceive, nor be deceived.

Verse 28. And now, little children] Τεκνια, beloved children, abide in him, in Christ Jesus. Let His word and Spirit continually abide in you; and have communion with the Father and the Son.

That, when he shall appear] To judge the world, we may have confidence, παρρησιαν, freedom of speech, liberty of access, boldness, from a conviction that our cause is good, and that we have had proper ground for exultation. And not be ashamed—confounded, when it appears that those who were brought to Christ Jesus have apostatized, and are no longer found in the congregation of the saints, and consequently are not our crown of rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus. Abide in Him, that this may not be the case.

Verse 29. If ye know that he is righteous] That God is a holy God; ye know also, that every one who doeth righteousness, who lives a holy life, following the commandments of God, is born of him; BEGOTTEN of Him; is made a partaker of the Divine nature, without which he could neither have a holy heart, nor live a holy life.

This verse properly belongs to the following chapter, and should not be separated from it. The subject is the same, and does not stand in any strict relation to that with which the 28th verse concludes.

The titles bestowed on Christians in the New Testament have been misunderstood by many. What belongs, strictly speaking, to the PURE and HOLY, is often applied to those who, though bound by their PROFESSION to be such, were very far from it. This has been strongly denied by writers who should have known better. Dr. Taylor has handled this point well in his Key to the Apostolic Writings, from which I have given a copious extract in my Preface to the Epistle to the Romans, from the conviction that the subject had been most dangerously misapprehended: and that several of the worst heresies which disgrace religion had sprung from this misapprehension. With some, Dr. Taylor's being an Arian was sufficient to invalidate any testimony he might offer: but it is no discovery of Dr. Taylor; it is what every attentive unprejudiced Reader finds on reading the Old Testament in connexion with the New. Perhaps the testimony of a judicious Calvinist may be better received; not that this truth needs the testimony of either, because it every where speaks for itself, but because those who have too little grace, sense, and candour, to search for themselves, may be pleased that Dr. Macknight saves them the trouble.

After having remarked that the words born of him, εξ αυτου γεγεννηται, should be translated hath been BEGOTTEN of Him, which is the literal signification of the word, from γενναω genero, gigno, I beget, (BORN of God being nowhere found in the Scripture,) he goes on to say:

"To understand the import of the high titles which in the New Testament are given to the disciples of Christ, viz. The begotten of God; as here:—children of God; as in the next chapter—Heirs of God, Rom. viii. 17.—Elect of God—adopted of God—saints—a royal priesthood—a holy nation—a peculiar people, 1 Pet. ii. 9. the following observations may be of use.

"1. These high titles were anciently given to the Israelites as a nation, because they were separated from mankind to be God's visible church, for the purpose of preserving the knowledge and worship of Him in the world, as the only true God.

"This appears from God's own words, Exod. xxix. 3, &c. Tell the children of Israel, Ye have seen what I did to the Egyptians; and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself.—Now, therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people. And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation.—Deut. xiv. 1, &c. Ye are the children of the Lord your God: for thou art a holy people to the Lord thy God. In particular, the title of God's son, even his first-born, was given to the whole Israelitish nation, by God Himself, Exod. iv. 24. chiefly, because they were the descendants of Isaac, who was supernaturally begotten by Abraham, through the power which accompanied the promise, Gen. xviii. 10. Lo, Sarah shall have a son. So St. Paul informs us. Rom. ix. 7. Neither because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children (namely of God;) but in Isaac shall a seed be to thee—the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of promise are counted for a seed. The apostle's meaning is, that Ishmael and his posterity, whom Abraham procreated by his own natural strength, being children of the flesh, were not children of God: that is, they were not made the visible church and people of God. But Isaac and his descendants, whom Abraham procreated through the strength which accompanied the promise, being more properly procreated by GOD than by Abraham, were the children of God, i. e. were made the visible church and people of God, because, by their supernatural generation and title to inherit Canaan, they were a fit image to represent the Catholic invisible church of God, consisting of believers of all ages and nations, who, being regenerated by the Spirit of God, are the true children of God, and heirs of the heavenly country of which Canaan was a type.

"2. As the promise, Lo, Sarah shall have a son, which was given to Abraham when he was a hundred years old, and Sarah was ninety, implied that that son was to be supernaturally procreated: so the promise given to Abraham, Gen. xvii. 5. A father of many nations have I constituted thee, implied that the many nations of believers who, by this promise, were given to Abraham for a seed, were to be generated by the operation of the Spirit of God; producing in them faith and obedience, similar to those for which Abraham was constituted the father of all believers. This higher generation, by which believers have the moral image of God communicated to them, is well described, John i. 12. As many as received him, to them gave he power to be called the sons of God; even to them who believe on his name: οι εγεννηθησαν, who were BEGOTTEN, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. That is, men become the true sons of God; not by their being naturally descended from this or that father, nor by their being called the sons of God by men like themselves; but by God's bestowing on them that high appellation, on account of their faith and holiness," (which were produced in them by their regeneration, through the Spirit of God.)

"3. If the Israelites, of whom the ancient visible church and people of God were composed, were all called the sons of God, because Isaac, from whom they were descended, was supernaturally begotten by the power of God; certainly the believers of all ages and nations, of whom the visible church is composed, may, with much greater propriety, be called the sons of God, since they are begotten of God, and possess His moral nature.

"4. Thus it appears that the high titles above-mentioned, namely, the sons of God, the children of God, the elect of God, the adoption of sons, the election, saints, holy nation, royal priesthood, peculiar people, were anciently given to the Israelites AS A NATION, merely on account of their being the visible church and people of God, without any regard to the personal character of the individuals of whom that nation was composed. Also it appears, that, under the gospel, the same high titles were bestowed on whole churches, merely on account of their profession of Christianity, without any regard to the personal character of the individuals who composed these churches. But these high titles, with some others of greater importance, such as the begotten of God, the heirs of God, the adoption, were given in an appropriated sense to individuals likewise, on account of their faith and holiness. When given to whole churches, these titles imported nothing more than that the society to which they were given was a church of Christ, (i. e. professed Christianity;) and that the individuals of which that society was composed were entitled to all the privileges belonging to the visible church of God. But when appropriated to individuals, these titles implied that the persons to whom they were given were really partakers of the nature of God; and that they were the objects of His paternal love, and heirs of His glory.

"Wherefore, in reading the Scriptures, by attending to the different foundations of these titles, and by considering whether they are applied to churches, or individuals, we shall easily understand their true import. Thus, when St. Paul, writing to the Thessalonians, says, 1 Thess. i. 4. Knowing, brethren, beloved of God, your election, he could not mean their election to eternal life, since many of them were living disorderly, 2 Thess. iii. 11. but their election to be the visible church of God under the gospel: whereas, when John speaks in the verse before us, every one who doeth righteousness hath been begotten of God, by restricting the title to a specific character, he teaches us that the persons of whom he speaks are the sons of God in the highest sense, and heirs of eternal glory."

Verse 1. Behold, what manner of love] Whole volumes might be written upon this and the two following verses, without exhausting the extraordinary subject contained in them: viz. the love of God to man. The apostle himself, though evidently filled with God, and walking in the fulness of His light, does not attempt to describe it: he calls on the world and the church to behold it; to look upon it, to contemplate it, and wonder at it.

What manner of love—Ποταπην αγαπην, what great love, both as to quantity and quality; for these ideas are included in the original term. The length, the breadth, the depth, the height, he does not attempt to describe.

God the Father hath bestowed] For we had neither claim nor merit, that we should be called, that is, constituted, or made, the sons of God, who were before children of the wicked one; animal, earthly, devilish: therefore, the love which brought us from such a depth of misery and degra-

Therefore the world] The Jews, and all who know not God, and are seeking their portion in this life: knoweth us not; do not acknowledge, respect, love, or approve of us. In this sense the word γινωσκειν is here to be understood. The world KNEW well enough that there were such persons; but they did not approve of them. We have often seen that this is a frequent use of the term know, both in Hebrew and Greek; in the Old Testament and also in the New.

Because it knew him not.] The Jews did not acknowledge Jesus: they neither approved of Him, His doctrine, nor His manner of life.

Verse 2. Now are we the sons of God] He speaks of those who are begotten of God, and who work righteousness. See the preceding chapter.

And it doth not yet appear what we shall be] Ουπω εφανερωθη, it is not yet manifest; though we know that we are the children of God, we do not know that state of glorious excellence to which, as such, we shall be raised.

When he shall appear] Εαν εφανερωθη, when he shall be manifested; i. e. when He comes the second time; and shall be manifested, in His glorified human nature, to judge the world.

We shall be like him] For our vile bodies shall be made like unto His glorious body; we shall see him as he is, in all the glory and majesty both of the Divine and human nature: see Phil. iii. 21. and John xvii. 24. Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory. John had seen His glory on the mount, when he was transfigured; and this we find was ineffably grand: but even this must have been partially obscured, in order to enable the disciples to bear the sight; for they were not then like him. But when they shall be like Him, they shall see Him as he is, in all the splendour of His infinite Majesty.

Verse 3. And every man that hath this hope in him] All who have the hope of seeing Christ as He is; that is, of enjoying Him in His own glory: purifieth himself; abstains from all evil, and keeps himself from all that is in the world, viz. the lust of the flesh, of the eye, and the pride of life. God having purified his heart, it is his business to keep himself in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, unto eternal life. The apostle does not here speak of any man purifying his own heart, because this is impossible; but of his persevering in the state of purity into which the Lord hath brought him. The words, however, may be understood of a man's anxiously using all the means that lead to purity; and imploring God for the sanctifying Spirit, to "cleanse the thoughts of his heart by its inspiration; that he may perfectly love Him, and worthily magnify His name."

As he is pure.] Till he is as completely saved from his sins, as Christ was free from sin. Many tell us that "this never can be done, for no man can be saved from sin in this life." Will these persons permit us to ask, How much sin may we be saved from in this life? Something must be ascertained on this subject:—1. That the soul may have some determinate object in view—2. That it may not lose its time, or employ its faith and energy, in praying for what is impossible to be attained. Now, as He was manifested to take away our sins, ver. 5. to destroy the works of the devil, ver. 8. and as His blood cleanseth from all sin and unrighteousness, chap. i. 7, 9. is it not evident that God means that believers in Christ shall be saved from all sin?—for, if His blood cleanses from all sin, if He destroys the works of the devil, and sin is the work of the devil, and if he who is born of God does not commit sin, ver. 9. then he must be cleansed from all sin; and while he continues in that state, he lives without sinning against God; for the seed of God remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born, or begotten, of God, ver. 9. How strangely warped and blinded by prejudice and system must men be, who, in the face of such evidence as this, will still dare to maintain that no man can be saved from his sin in this life; but must daily commit sin, in thought, word, and deed, as the Westminster divines have asserted: that is, every man is laid under the fatal necessity of sinning as many ways against God as the devil does through his natural wickedness and malice; for even the devil himself can have no other way of sinning against God, except by thought, word, and deed. And yet, according to these, and others of the same creed, "even the most regenerate, sin thus against God as long as they live." It is a miserable salvo to say, they do not sin so much as they used to do; and they do not sin habitually, only occasionally.

Alas for this system! Could not the grace that saved them partially, save them perfectly? Could not that power of God that saved them from habitual sin, save them from occasional or accidental sin? Shall we suppose that sin, how potent soever it may be, is as potent as the Spirit and grace of Christ? And may we not ask, If it was for God's glory and their good that they were partially saved, would it not have been more for God's glory, and their good, if they had been perfectly saved? But the letter and spirit of God's word, and the design and end of Christ's coming, is to save His people from their sins. Dr. Macknight, having stated that αγνιζει, purifieth, is in the present tense, most ridiculously draws this conclusion from it: "In this life no one can attain to perfect purity; by this text, therefore, as well as by 1 John i. 8. those fanatics are condemned who imagine they are able to live without sin." Yes, doctor, the men you call fanatics do most religiously believe that by the grace of Christ cleansing and strengthening them, they can love God with all their heart, soul, mind, and strength, and their neighbour as themselves; and live without grieving the Spirit of God, and without sinning against their heavenly Father. And they believe that, if they are not thus saved, it is their own fault. But a blind man must ever be a bad judge of colours.

Verse 4. Sin is the transgression of the law.] The spirit of the law, as well as of the Gospel, is, that "we should love God with all our powers, and our neighbour as ourselves." All disobedience is contrary to love; therefore sin is the transgression of the law, whether the act refer immediately to God, or to our neighbour.

Verse 5. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins] He came into the world to destroy the power, pardon the guilt, and cleanse from the pollution, of sin. This was the very design of His manifestation in the flesh. He was born, suffered, and died, for this very purpose: and can it be supposed that He either cannot or will not accomplish the object of his own coming?

In him is no sin] And, therefore, properly qualified to be the atoning Sacrifice for the sins of men.

Verse 6. Whosoever abideth in him] By faith, love, and obedience:—

Sinneth not] Because his heart is purified by faith, and he is a worker together with God, and consequently does not receive the grace of God in vain.—See on ver. 3.

Hath not seen him] It is no unusual thing with this apostle, both in his Gospel and in his Epistles, to put occasionally the past for the present, and the present for the past tense. It is very likely that here he puts, after the manner of the Hebrew, the preterite for the present. He who sins against God doth not see him, neither doth he know him. The eye of his faith is darkened, so that he cannot see Him as he formerly did; and he has no longer the experimental knowledge of God as his Father and Portion.

Verse 7. Let no man deceive you] Either by asserting that "you cannot be saved from sin in this life; or that sin will do you no harm, and cannot alter your state, if you are adopted into the family of God; for sin cannot annul this adoption." Hear God, ye deceivers! He that doeth righteousness is righteous, according to his state, nature, and the extent of his moral powers.

Even as he is righteous.] Allowing for the disparity that must necessarily exist between that which is bounded, and that which is without limits. As God, in the infinitude of His nature, is righteous; so they, being filled with Him, are in their limited nature righteous.

Verse 8. He that committeth sin is of the devil] Hear this also! ye who plead for Baal, and cannot bear the thought of that doctrine that states believers are to be saved from all sin in this life:—he who committeth sin is a child of the devil, and shows that he has still the nature of the devil in him; for the devil sinneth from the beginning: he was the father of sin, brought sin into the world, and maintains sin in the world by living in the hearts of his own children, and thus leading them to transgression; and persuading others that they cannot be saved from their sins in this life, that he may secure a residence in their heart. He knows that if he has a place there, throughout life, he will probably have it at death; and, if so, throughout eternity.

Verse 9. Whosoever is born of God] Γεγεννημενος, begotten of God, doth not commit sin: that is, say some, "as he used to do; he does not sin habitually, as he formerly did." This is bringing the influence and privileges of the heavenly birth very low indeed. We have the most indubitable evidence that many of the Heathen philosophers had acquired, by mental discipline and cultivation, an entire ascendency over all their wonted vicious habits. Perhaps my Reader will recollect the story of the physiognomist, who, coming into the place where Socrates was delivering a lecture, his pupils, wishing to put the principles of the man's science to proof, desired him to examine the face of their master, and say what his moral character was. After a full contemplation of the philosopher's visage, he pronounced him "the most gluttonous, drunken, brutal, and libidinous old man that he had ever met." As the character of Socrates was the reverse of all this, his disciples began to insult the physiognomist. Socrates interfered and said, The principles of his science may be very correct, for such I was, but I have conquered it by my philosophy O ye Christian divines, ye real or pretended gospel ministers, will ye allow the influence of the grace of Christ a sway not even so extensive as that of the philosophy of a Heathen, who never heard of the true God!

Verse 10. In this the children of God are manifest] Here is a fearful text. Who is a child of the devil? He that commits sin. Who is a child of God? He that works righteousness. By this text we shall stand or fall before God; whatever our particular creed may say to the contrary.

Neither he that loveth not his brother.] No man is of God who is not ready on all emergencies to do any act of kindness for the comfort, relief, and support, of any human being. For, as God made of one blood all the nations of men to dwell upon the face of the whole earth; so all are of one family; and, consequently, all are brethren; and should love as brethren.

Verse 11. For this is the message] See chap. i. 5. From the beginning God hath taught men that they should love one another. How essentially necessary this is to the comfort and well-being of man, in this state of trial and difficulty, every sensible man must see. All are dependent upon all; all upon each; and each upon all. Mutual love makes this dependence pleasant, and doubly profitable. Nothing can be more pleasing to an ingenuous and generous mind than to communicate acts of kindness.

Verse 12. Not as Cain] Men should not act to each other as Cain did to his brother Abel. He murdered him because he was better than himself. But who was Cain? Εκ του πονηρου ην, he was of the devil. And who are they who through pride, lust of power, ambition, gain, &c. murder each other in wars and political contentions? Εκ του πονηρου εισι. To attempt to justify the principle, and excuse the instigators, authors, abettors, &c. of such wars, is as vain as it is wicked. They are opposed to the nature of God, and to that message which he has sent to man from the beginning—love one another. Love your enemies. Surely this does not mean, blow out their brains, or cut their throats. O how much of the spirit, temper, and letter, of the gospel have the nations of the world, and particularly the nations of Europe, to learn!

And wherefore slew he him?] What could induce a brother to imbrue his hands in a brother's blood? Why, his brother was righteous, and he was wicked: and the seed of the wicked one which was in him, induced him to destroy his brother, because the seed of God, the Divine nature, was found in him.

Verse 13. Marvel not—if the world hate you.] Expect no better treatment from unconverted Jews and Gentiles than Abel received from his wicked and cruel brother. This was a lesson to the church, preparatory to martyrdom. Expect neither justice nor mercy from the men who are enemies of God. They are either full of malice and envy, hateful, hating one another; or they are specious, hollow, false, and deceitful. "A foe to GOD, was ne'er true friend to MAN."

evil, and his brother's righteous.

13 Marvel not, my brethren, if [a] the world hate you.

14 [b] We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. [c] He that loveth not his brother abideth in death.

15 [d] Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that [e] no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

Verse 14. We know that we have passed from death unto life] Death and life are represented here as two distinct territories, states, or kingdoms; to either of which the inhabitants of either may be removed. This is implied in the term μεταβεβηκαμεν, from μετα, denoting change of place, and βαινω, I go. It is the same figure which St. Paul uses, Coloss. i. 13. Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of the Son of his love. The believers to whom St. John writes had been once in the region and shadow of death; in the place where sin and death reigned; whose subjects they were: but they had left that kingdom of oppression, wretchedness, and wo; and came over to the kingdom of life; whose King was the Prince and Author of life; where all was liberty, prosperity, and happiness, where life and love were universally prevalent, and death and hatred could not enter. We know, therefore, says the apostle, that we are passed over from the territory of death, to the kingdom of life, because we love the brethren, which those who continue in the old kingdom, under the old government, can never do: for he that loveth not his brother abideth in death. He has never changed his original residence. He is still an unconverted, unrenewed sinner.

Verse 15. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer] He has the same principle in him which was in Cain; and it may lead to the same consequences.

No murderer hath eternal life] Eternal life springs from an indwelling God; and God cannot dwell in the heart where hatred and malice dwell. This text has been quoted to prove, that no murderer can be saved. This is not said in the text; and there have been many instances of persons who have been guilty of murder, having had deep and genuine repentance; and who, doubtless, found mercy from His hands who prayed for His murderers, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do! It is, however, an awful text for the consideration of those who shed human blood on frivolous pretences; or in those wars which have their origin in the worst passions of the human heart.

Verse 16. Hereby perceive we the love of God] This 16th verse of this 3d chapter of John's First Epistle is, in the main, an exact counterpart of the 16th verse of the 3d chapter of St. John's Gospel, God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. Here, the apostle says, we perceive, εγνωκαμεν, we have known the love of God, because He had laid down His life for us. Of God, is not in the text; but it is preserved in one MS. and in two or three of the Versions; but though this does not establish its authenticity, yet του Θεου, of God, is necessarily understood, or του Χριστου, of Christ, as Erpen's Arabic has it; or αυτου εις ημας, his love to us, as is found in the Syriac. A higher proof than this, of His love, Christ could not have possibly given to the children of men.

We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren] We should risk our life to save the lives of others; and we should be ready to lay down our lives, to redeem their souls, when this may appear to be a means of leading them to God.

Verse 17. But whoso hath this world's good] Here is a test of this love: if we do not divide our bread with the hungry, we certainly would not lay down our life for him. Whatever love we may pretend to mankind, if we are not charitable and benevolent, we give the lie to our profession. If we have not bowels of compassion, we have not the love of God in us: if we shut up our bowels against the poor, we shut Christ out of our hearts, and ourselves out of heaven.

This world's good—Τον βιον του κοσμου, the life of this world; i. e. the means of life; for so βιος, is often used.—See Mark xii. 24. Luke viii. 43. xv. 12, 30. xxi. 4. and other places.

How dwelleth the love of God in him?] That is, it cannot possibly dwell in such a person. Hard-heartedness and God's love never meet together; much less can they be associated.

Verse 18. My little children] Τεκνια μου, my beloved children, let us not love in word; in merely allowing the general doctrine of love to God and man to be just and right:—

Neither in tongue] In making professions of love, and of a charitable and humane disposition, and resting there:—but in deed; by humane and merciful acts.

And in truth] Feeling the disposition of which we speak. There is a good saying in Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 145. 4. on this point: "If love consisted in word only, then love ceaseth as soon as the word is pronounced. Such was the love between Balak and Balaam. But, if love consisteth not in word, it cannot be dissolved; such was the love of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the rest of the patriarchs which were before them."

Verse 19. Hereby we know that we are of the truth] That we have the true religion of the Lord Jesus. And shall assure our hearts, be persuaded in our consciences, that we have the truth as it is in Jesus; as no man can impose upon himself by imagining he loves, when he does not; he may make empty professions to others; but if he loves either God or man, he knows it, because he feels it: and love unfelt is not love; it is word or tongue. This the apostle lays down as a test of a man's Christianity; and it is the strongest and most infallible test that can be given. He that loves, feels that he does love; and he who feels that he loves God and man, has true religion: and he who is careful to show the fruits of this love, in obedience to God, and humane acts to man, gives others the fullest proof that he has the loving mind that was in Jesus.

Verse 20. If our heart condemn us] If we be conscious that our love is feigned, we shall feel inwardly condemned in professing to have what we have not. And if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, for He knows every hypocritical winding and turning of the soul; He searches the heart, and tries the reins, and sees all the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of the heart, which we cannot see; and if we could see them, could not comprehend them; and as He is the just Judge, He will condemn us more strictly and extensively than we can be, by our own conscience.

Verse 21. If our heart condemn us not] If we be conscious to ourselves of our own sincerity, that we practise not deceit, and use no mask; then have we confidence towards God; we can appeal to Him for our sincerity; and we can come with boldness to the Throne of grace to obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. And, therefore, says the apostle, Verse 22. Whatsoever we ask] In such a spirit, we receive of him, for He delights to bless the humble, upright, and sincere soul.

Because we keep his commandments] Viz. by loving Him, and loving our neighbour. These are the great commandments both of the Old Covenant and the New. And whoever is filled with this love to God and man will do those things which are pleasing to him; for love is the very soul and principle of obedience.

The word heart is used in the preceding verses for conscience: and so the Greek fathers interpret it; particularly Origen, Nicephorus, and Œcumenius; but this is not an infrequent meaning of the word in the Sacred Writings.

Verse 23. That we should believe on the name of his Son] We are commanded to believe on Christ, that, for the sake of His passion and death, we may be justified from all things, from which we could not be justified by the law of Moses; and being through Him redeemed from the guilt of sin, restored to the Divine favour, and made partakers of the Holy Ghost, we are enabled to love one another as he gave us commandment: for without a renewal of the heart, love to God and man is impossible; and this renewal comes by Christ Jesus.

Verse 24. Dwelleth in him] i. e. In God: and He, God, in him, the believer.

And hereby we know] We know by the Spirit which He hath given us, that we dwell in God, and God in us. It was not by conjecture or inference that Christians of old knew they were in the favour of God: it was by the testimony of God's own Spirit in their hearts: and this testimony was not given in a transient manner, but was constant and abiding, while they continued under the influence of that faith that worketh by love. Every good man is a temple of the Holy Ghost; and wherever He is, He is both light and power. By His power He works; by His light he makes both Himself and His work known. Peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost, must proceed from the indwelling of that Holy Spirit; and those who have these blessings, must know that they have them; for we cannot have heavenly peace and heavenly joy, without knowing that we have them. But this Spirit in the soul of a believer is not only manifest by its effects, but it bears its own witness to its own indwelling. So that a man not only knows that he has this Spirit from the fruits of the Spirit; but he knows that he has it, from its own direct witness. It may be said, "How can these things be?" And it may be answered, By the power, light, and mercy of God. But that such things are, the Scriptures uniformly attest; and the experience of the whole genuine church of Christ, and of every truly converted soul, sufficiently proves. As the wind bloweth where it listeth, and we cannot tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit: the thing is certain, and fully known by its effects; but how this testimony is given and confirmed is inexplicable. Every good man feels it, and knows he is of God, by the Spirit which God has given him.

CHAPTER IV.

We must not believe every teacher who professes to have a Divine commission to preach, but try such, whether they be of God; and the more so, because many false prophets are gone out into the world, 1. Those who deny that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, have the spirit of antichrist, 2, 3. The followers of God have been enabled to discern and overcome them, 4—6. The necessity of love to God and one another shown, from God's love to us, 7—11. Though no man hath seen God, yet every genuine Christian knows Him by the Spirit which God has given him, 12, 13. The apostles testified that God sent His Son to be the Saviour of the world; and God dwelt in those who confessed this truth, 14, 15. God is love, 16. The nature and properties of perfect love, 17, 18. We love Him because He first loved us, 19. The wickedness of pretending to love God while we hate one another, 20, 21.

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Beloved, believe not every spirit] Do not be forward to believe every teacher to be a man sent of God. As in those early times every teacher professed to be inspired by the Spirit of God, because all the prophets had come thus accredited; the term spirit was used to express the man who pretended to be, and teach, under the Spirit's influence. See 1 Cor. xii. 1—12. 1 Tim. iv. 1.

Try the spirits] Δοκιμαζετε τα πνευματα· Put these teachers to the proof. Try them, by that testimony which is known to have come from the Spirit of God, the word of revelation already given.

Many false prophets] Teachers not inspired by the Spirit of God are gone out into the world; among the Jewish people particularly, and among them who are carnal, and have not the Spirit.

Verse 2. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God] We know that the man who teaches that Jesus Christ is the promised Messiah, and that He is come in the flesh, is of God; is inspired by the Divine Spirit: for no man can call Jesus Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.

3 And [a] every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and [b] even now is it in the world.

4 [c] Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you, than [d] he that is in the world.

5 [e] They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and [f] the world heareth them.

6 We are of God: [g] he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we [h] the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error.

Verse 3. Every spirit] Every teacher, that confesseth not Jesus, is not of God; has not been inspired by God. The words εν σαρκι ελελυθοτα, is come in the flesh, are wanting in AB. several others, both the Syriac, the Polyglott, Arabic, Æthiopic, Coptic, Armenian, and Vulgate; in Origen, Cyril, Theodoret, Irenæus, and others. Griesbach has left them out of the Text.

Spirit of antichrist] All the opponents of Christ's incarnation; and consequently of His passion, death, and resurrection, and the benefits to be derived from them.

Ye have heard that it should come] See 2 Thess. ii. 7.

Even now is it in the world.] Is working powerfully both among the Jews and Gentiles.

Verse 4. Ye are of God] Ye are under the influence of the Divine Spirit: And have overcome them; your testimony, proceeding from the Spirit of Christ, has invalidated theirs, which has proceeded from the influence of Satan: For, greater is the Holy Spirit which is in you, than the spirit which is in the world.

Verse 5. They are of the world] They have no spiritual views. They have no spirituality of mind; they seek the present world, and its enjoyments. Their conversation is worldly, and worldly men hear them in preference to all others. Thus they have their partisans.

Verse 6. We are of God] We, apostles, have the Spirit of God, and speak and teach by that Spirit. He that knoweth God, who has a truly spiritual discernment, heareth us; acknowledges that our doctrine is from God; that it is spiritual, and leads from earth to heaven.

Hereby know we the spirit of truth] The doctrine and teacher most prized and followed by worldly men, and by the gay, giddy, and garish multitude, are not from God; they savour of the flesh, lay on no restraints, prescribe no cross-bearing, and leave every one in full possession of his heart's lusts, and easily besetting sins. And by this, false doctrine and false teachers are easily discerned.

Verse 7. Beloved, let us love one another] And ever be ready to promote each other's welfare, both spiritual and temporal.

For love is of God] And ever acts like Him: He loves man, and daily loads him with His benefits. He that loveth most, has most of God in him: and he that loveth God and his neighbour, as before described and commanded, is born of God; εκ του Θεου γεγεννηται, is begotten of God; is a true child of his heavenly Father; for he is made a partaker of the Divine nature; and this, his love to God and man proves.

Verse 8. He that loveth not] As already described; knoweth not God; has no experimental knowledge of Him.

God is love.] An infinite Fountain of benevolence and beneficence to every human being. He hates nothing that He has made. He cannot hate, because He is love. He causes his sun to rise on the evil and the good; and sends His rain on the just and the unjust. He has made no human being for perdition; nor even rendered it impossible, by any necessitating decree, for any fallen soul to find mercy. He has given the fullest proof of His love to the whole human race by the incarnation of His Son, who tasted death for every man. How can a decree of absolute unconditional reprobation of the greater part, or any part of the human race, stand in the presence of such a text as this! It has been well observed, that although God is holy, just, righteous, &c. He is never called Holiness, Justice, &c. in the abstract, as He is here called Love. This seems to be the essence of the Divine nature; and all other attributes to be only modifications of this.

Verse 9. In this was manifested the love of God] The mission of Jesus Christ was the fullest proof that God could give, or that man could receive, of His infinite love to the world.

That we might live through him.] The whole world was sentenced to death because of sin; and every individual was dead in trespasses and sins; and Jesus came to die in the stead of the world, and to quicken every believer, that all might live to Him who died for them and rose again. This is another strong allusion to John iii. 16. God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Where the Reader is requested to see the Note.

Verse 10. Not that we loved God] And that He was thereby induced to give His Son to be a propitiation for our sins. No: we were enemies to God, and yet Christ died for our ungodly souls. See Rom. v. 6—11. and the Notes there. So it was God's love, not our merit, that induced Him to devise means that His banished might not be expelled from Him.

Verse 11. If God so loved us] Without any reason or consideration on our part, and without any desert in us; we ought also, in like manner, to love one another; and not suspend our love to a fellow-creature, either on his moral worth, or his love to us. We should love one another for God's sake; and then, no unkind carriage of a brother would induce us to withdraw our love from him: for, if it have GOD for its motive and model, it will never fail.

Verse 12. No man hath seen God at any time] The very words, with the change of εωρακε for τεθεαται, of this apostle, in his Gospel, chap. i. 18. We may feel Him, though we cannot see Him; and if we love one another, He dwelleth in us, and His love is perfected in us: it has then its full accomplishment, having moulded us according to its own nature.

Verse 13. Hereby know we, &c.] See the Note on chap. iii. 24.

Verse 14. And we have seen] Jesus Christ manifested in the flesh: see chap. i. 1, &c. And do testify, bear witness in consequence of having the fullest conviction that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. We have had the fullest proof of this, from His doctrine and miracles which we heard and saw, during the whole time that He sojourned among men.

Verse 15. Whosoever shall confess] Much stress is laid on this confession; because the false teachers denied the reality of the incarnation: but this confession implied also such a belief in Christ as put them in possession of His pardoning mercy and indwelling Spirit.

Verse 16. God is love] See on ver. 8. He that dwelleth in love, he who is full of love to God and man, is full of God, for God is love: and where such love is, there is God, for He is the Fountain and Maintainer of it.

Verse 17. Herein is our love made perfect] By God dwelling in us, and we in him; having cast out all the carnal mind that was enmity against himself, and filled the whole heart with the spirit of love and purity. Thus the love is made perfect: when it thus fills the heart it has all its degrees; it is all in all; and all in every power, passion, and faculty, of the soul.

May have boldness in the day of judgment] Παρρησιαν, freedom of speech, and liberty of access; seeing, in the person of our Judge, Him who has died for us, regenerated our hearts, and who Himself fills them.

As he is] Pure, holy, and loving: So are we in this world; being saved from our sins, and made like to Himself in righteousness and true holiness. No man can contemplate the day of judgment with any comfort or satisfaction but on this ground, that the blood of Christ hath cleansed him from all sin; and that he is kept by the power of God, 18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth is [a] not made perfect in love.

19 We love him, because he first loved us.

20 [b] If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth through faith, unto salvation. This will give him boldness in the day of judgment.

[a] Ver. 12.

[b] Ch. 2. 4. & 3. 17.

Verse 18. There is no fear in love] The man who feels that he loves God with all his heart, can never dread Him as his Judge. As he is now made a partaker of His Spirit, and carries a sense of the Divine approbation in his conscience; he has nothing of that fear that produces terror, or brings torment. The perfect love, that fulness of love which he has received, casteth out fear; removes all terror relative to this day of judgment, for it is of this that the apostle particularly speaks. And as it is inconsistent with the gracious design of God to have His followers miserable, and as he cannot be unhappy whose heart is full of the love of his God, this love must necessarily exclude this fear or terror; because that brings torment, and hence is inconsistent with that happiness which a man must have who continually enjoys the approbation of his God.

He that feareth] He who is still uncertain concerning his interest in Christ; who, although he has many heavenly drawings, and often sits with Christ some moments, on a throne of love, yet feels from the evils of his heart a dread of the day of judgment, is not made perfect in love; has not yet received the abiding witness of the Spirit, that he is begotten of God; nor that fulness of love to God and man which excludes the enmity of the carnal mind, and which it is his privilege to receive. But is the case of such a man desperate? No, it is neither desperate nor deplorable; he is in the way of salvation, and not far from the kingdom of heaven. Let such earnestly seek, and fervently believe on the Son of God: and He will soon give them another baptism of His Spirit, will purge out all the old leaven, and fill their whole souls with that love which is the fulfilling of the law. He who is not yet perfect in love may speedily become so, because God can say in a moment, I will, be thou clean; and immediately his leprosy will depart. Among men we find some that have neither love nor fear; others, that have fear without love; others, that have love and fear; and others, that have love without fear.

1. Profligates, and worldly men in general, have neither the fear nor love of God.

2. Deeply awakened and distressed penitents have the fear or terror of God without His love.

3. Babes in Christ, or young converts, have often distressing fear mixed with their love.

4. Adult Christians have love without this fear; because fear hath torment; and they are ever happy, being filled with God.—See Mr. Wesley's Note on this place.

1. We must not suppose that the love of God shed abroad in the heart is ever imperfect in itself; it is only so in degree. There may be a less or greater degree of what is perfect in itself; so it is with respect to the love which the followers of God have: they may have measures or degrees of perfect love without its fulness. There is nothing imperfect in the love of God, whether it be considered as existing in Himself, or as communicated to His followers.

2. We are not to suppose that the love of God casts out every kind of fear from the soul; it only casts out that which has torment:—1. A filial fear is consistent with the highest degrees of love; and even necessary to the preservation of that grace. This is properly its guardian; and, without this, love would soon degenerate into listlessness, or presumptive boldness. 2. Nor does it cast out that fear which is so necessary to the preservation of life; that fear which leads a man to flee from danger, lest his life should be destroyed. 3. Nor does it cast out that fear which may be engendered by sudden alarm. All these are necessary to our well-being: but it destroys—1. The fear of want. 2. The fear of death: and, 3. The fear or terror of judgment. All these fears bring torment, and are inconsistent with this perfect love.

Verse 19. We love him, because he first loved us] This is the foundation of our love to God. 1. We love Him because we find He has loved us. 2. We love Him from a sense of obligation and gratitude. 3. We love Him from the influence of His own love: from His love shed abroad in our hearts our love to Him proceeds. It is the seed whence our love springs. The verse might be rendered, Let us therefore love him, because he first loved us: thus the Syriac and Vulgate.

Verse 20. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother] This, as well as many other parts of this Epistle, seems levelled against the Jews, who pretended much love to God, while they hated the Gentiles: and even some of them who were brought into the Christian church, brought this leaven with them. It required a miracle to redeem St. Peter's mind from the influence of this principle.—See Acts x.

tresses. The first will excite a love of complacency and delight; the second, a love of compassion and pity.

Whom he hath not seen] If he love not his brother, it is a proof that the love of God is not in him; and, if he have not the love of God, he cannot love God; for God can be loved only through the influence of His own love: see on ver. 19. The man who hates his fellow, does not love God. He who does not love God, has not the love of God in him; and he who has not the love of God in him, can neither love God nor man.

Verse 21. This commandment have we] We should love one another; and love our neighbour as ourselves. The love of God, and the love of man, can never be separated: he who loves God will love his brother; he who loves his brother, gives this proof that he loves God; because he loves with a measure of that love which, in its infinitude, dwells in God.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. Whosoever believeth, &c.] Expressions of this kind are to be taken in connexion with the subjects necessarily implied in them. He that believeth that Jesus is the Messiah, and confides in Him for the remission of sins, is begotten of God; and they who are pardoned and begotten of God, love Him in return for His love; and love all those who are His children.

Verse 2. By this we know that we love the children of God] Our love of God's followers, is a proof that we love God. Our love to God, is the cause why we love His children; and our keeping the commandments of God, is the proof that we love Him.

Verse 3. For this is the love of God] This the love of God necessarily produces. It is vain to pretend love to God, while we live in opposition to His will.

His commandments.] To love Him with all our heart, and our neighbour as ourselves, are not grievous; are not burthensome: for no man is burthened with the duties which his own love imposes. The old proverb explains the meaning of the apostle's words, Love feels no loads. Love to God brings strength from God: through His love and His strength, all His commandments are not only easy and light, but pleasant and delightful.

On the love of God, as being the foundation of all religious worship, there is a good saying in Sohar Exod. fol. 23. col. 91. "Rabbi Jesa said, How necessary is it that a man should love the holy blessed God! For, he can bring no other worship to God than love; and he who loves Him, and worships Him, from a principle of love; him the holy blessed God calls His beloved."

Verse 4. Whatsoever is born of God] Παν το γεγεννημενον; whatsoever (the neuter for the masculine) is begotten of God, overcometh the world. "I understand by this," says Schoettgen, "the Jewish church, or Judaism, which is often termed עולם הזה ôlam hazzeh, this world. The reasons which induce me to think so are, 1. Because this κοσμος, world, denied that the Messiah was come; but the Gentiles did not oppose this principle. 2. Because he proves the truth of the Christian religion against the Jews, reasoning according to the Jewish manner; whence it is evident, that he contends not against the Gentiles, but against the Jews. The sense, therefore, is, he who possesses the true Christian faith, can easily convict the Jewish religion of falsity." That is, he can show the vanity of their expectations, and the falsity of their glosses and prejudices. Suppose we understand by the world the evil principles and practices which are among men, and in the human heart; then the influence of God in the soul, may be properly said to overcome this; and by faith in the Son of God a man is able to overcome all that is in the world, viz. the desire of the flesh, the desire of the eye, and the pride of life.

Verse 5. He that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God] That He is the promised Messiah; that He came by a supernatural generation; and although truly man, came not by man, but by the power of the Holy Ghost in the womb of the Virgin Mary. The person who believes this, has the privilege of applying to the Lord for the benefits of the incarnation and passion of Jesus Christ, and receives the blessings which the Jews cannot have, because they believe not the Divine mission of Christ.

Verse 6. This is he that came by water and blood.] Jesus was attested to be the Son of God, and promised Messiah, by water, i. e. His baptism, when the Spirit of God came down from heaven upon Him, and the voice from heaven said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Jesus Christ came also by blood. He shed His blood for the sins of the world; and this was in accordance with all that the Jewish prophets had written concerning Him. Here the apostle says, that the Spirit witnesses this; that He came not by water only, being baptized, and baptizing men in His own name, that they might be His followers and disciples; but by blood also, by His sacrificial death, without which the world could not be saved, and He could have had no disciples. As, therefore, the Spirit of God witnessed His being the Son of God, at His baptism; and as the same Spirit in the prophets had witnessed that He should die a cruel, yet a sacrificial death; He is said here to bear witness, because He is the Spirit of truth.

Perhaps St. John makes here a mental comparison between CHRIST, Moses, and Aaron; to both of whom he opposes our Lord, and shows His superior excellence. Moses came by water—All the Israelites were baptized unto him in the cloud and in the sea, and thus became his flock and his disciples. 1 Cor. x. 1, 2. Aaron came by blood—He entered into the Holy of Holies with the blood of the victim, to make atonement for sin. Moses initiated the people into the covenant of God by bringing them under the cloud, and through the water. Aaron confirmed that covenant by shedding the blood, sprinkling part of it upon them, and the rest before the Lord in the Holy of Holies. Moses came only by water; Aaron only by blood; and both came as types. But CHRIST came both by water and blood, not typically, but really; not by the authority of another, but by His own. Jesus initiates His followers into the Christian covenant by the baptism of water; and confirms and seals to them the blessings of the covenant by an application of the blood of the atonement, thus purging their consciences, and purifying their souls.

Thus His religion is of infinitely greater efficacy than that in which Moses and Aaron were ministers. See Schoettgen.

It may be said also, that the Spirit bears witness of Jesus by His testimony in the souls of genuine Christians, and by the spiritual gifts and miraculous powers with which He endowed the apostles and primitive believers. This is agreeable to what St. John says in his Gospel, chap. xv. 26, 27. When the Comforter is come, the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me; and ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the be- even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. [a] And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth.

ginning. This place the apostle seems to have in his eye; and this would naturally lead him to speak concerning the three witnesses; the SPIRIT, the WATER, and the BLOOD, ver. 8.

Verse 7. There are three that bear record] The FATHER, who bears testimony to His Son; the WORD, or Λογος Logos, who bears testimony to the Father; and the HOLY GHOST, which bears testimony to the Father and the Son. And these three are one in essence, and agree in the one testimony, that Jesus came to die for, and give life to, the world.

But it is likely this verse is not genuine. It is wanting in every MS. of this Epistle written before the invention of printing, one excepted, the Codex Montfortii, in Trinity College, Dublin: the others which omit this verse amount to one hundred and twelve.

It is wanting in both the Syriac, all the Arabic, Æthiopic, the Coptic, Sahidic, Armenian, Slavonian, &c. in a word, in all the ancient Versions but the Vulgate; and even of this Version many of the most ancient and correct MSS. have it not. It is wanting also, in all the ancient Greek Fathers; and in most even of the Latin.

The words, as they exist in all the Greek MSS. with the exception of the Codex Montfortii, are the following:

"6. This is He that came by water and blood, Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth, 7. For there are three that bear witness, the Spirit, the water, and the blood, and these three agree in one. 9. If we receive the witness of man, the witness of God is greater, &c."

The words that are omitted by all the MSS. the above excepted, and all the Versions, the Vulgate excepted, are these:

[In heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit, and these three are one: and there are three which bear witness in earth.]

To make the whole more clear, that every Reader may see what has been added, I shall set down these verses, with the inserted words in brackets.

"6. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth. 7. For there are three that bear record [in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one. 8. And there are three that bear witness in earth,] the Spirit, and the water, and the blood, and these three agree in one. 9. If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater, &c." Any man may see, on examining the words, that if those included in brackets, which are wanting in the MSS. and Versions, be omitted, there is no want of connexion; and as to the sense, it is complete and perfect without them; and, indeed, much more so, than with them. I shall conclude this part of the Note with observing, with Dr. Dodd, "That there are some internal and accidental remarks, which may render the passage suspected; for the sense is complete, and the sense more clear and better preserved, without it. Besides, the Spirit is mentioned, both as a witness in heaven, and on earth; so that the six witnesses are thereby reduced to five, and the equality in number, or antithesis between the witnesses in heaven and on earth, is quite taken away. Besides, what need of witnesses in heaven? No one there doubts that Jesus is the Messiah; and if it be said, that the Father, Son, and Spirit, are witnesses on earth, then there are five witnesses on earth, and none in heaven; not to say that there is a little difficulty in interpreting how the Word, or the Son, can be a witness to Himself."

It may be necessary to inquire how this verse stood in our earliest English Bibles. In COVERDALE'S Bible, printed about 1535, for it bears no date, the seventh verse is put in brackets thus:

And it is the Sprete that beareth wytnes; for the Sprete is the trueth. (For there are thre which beare recorde in heaven: the Father, the Woorde, and the Holy Goost, and these thre are one.) And there are thre which beare recorde in earth: the Sprete, water, and blonde, and these thre are one. If we receyve, &c.

TINDAL was as critical as he was conscientious; and though he admitted the words into the text of the first edition of his New Testament printed in 1526; yet he distinguished them by a different letter, and put them in brackets as Coverdale has done; and also the words in earth, which stand in ver. 8. without proper authority, and which being excluded, make the Text the same as in the MSS. &c.

Two editions of this version are now before me; one printed in English and Latin 4to. with the following title.

The Newe Testament, both in Englyshe and Laten, of Mayster Erasmus translation—and imprinted by William Powell—the yere of our Lorde M.CCCCC.XLVII. And the fyrste yere of the kynges (Edw. VI.) moste gracious reygne.

8 And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one.

9 If we receive [a] the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: [b] for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son.

10 He that believeth on the Son of God [c] hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God, [d] hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son.

In this edition the Text stands thus:

And it is the Spirite that beareth wytnes, because the Spirite is truth (for there are thre whiche beare recorde in heaven, the Father, the Worde, and the Holy Ghost, and these thre are one.) For there are thre whiche beare recorde (in earth) the Spirite, water, and blode, and these thre are one. If we receyve, &c.

The other printed in London, "by William Tylle, 4to. without the Latin of Erasmus in M.CCCCC.XLIX. the thyrde yere of the reigne of our moost dreade Soverayne Lorde Kynge Edwarde the Syxte," has, with a small variety of spelling, the text in the same order, and the same words included in brackets as above.

The English Bible, with the book of Common Prayer, printed by Richard Cardmarden, at Rouen in Normandy, 1555, fol. exhibits the text faithfully, but in the following singular manner:—

And it is the Spyryte that beareth witnesse, because the Spyryte is truth. (for there are three which beare recorde in heaven, the Father, the Woorde, and the Holy Ghost; and these Three are One) And three which beare recorde * (in earth) the Spirite, and water, and bloode; and these three are one.

The first English Bible which I have seen, where these distinctions were omitted, is that called The Bishops' Bible printed by Jugge, fol. 1568. Since that time, all such distinctions have been generally disregarded.

Though a conscientious believer in the doctrine of the ever-blessed, holy, and undivided Trinity, and in the proper and essential Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, which doctrines I have defended, by many, and even new arguments, in the course of this Work, I cannot help doubting the authenticity of the text in question; and, for further particulars, refer to the observations at the end of this chapter.

Verse 8. The Spirit, and the water, and the blood] This verse is supposed to mean "the Spirit, in the word confirmed by miracles; the water, in baptism, wherein we are dedicated to the Son (with the Father and the Holy Spirit) typifying his spotless purity, and the inward purifying of our nature: and the blood, represented in the Lord's supper, and applied to the consciences of believers; and all these harmoniously agree in the same testimony, that Jesus Christ is the Divine, the complete, the only Saviour of the world." Mr. Wesley's Notes.

By the written word, which proceeded from the Holy Spirit, that Spirit is continually witnessing upon earth, that God hath given unto us eternal life.

By baptism, which points out our regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, and which is still maintained as an initiatory rite in the Christian church, we have another witness on earth of the truth, certainty, importance, and efficacy, of the Christian religion. The same may be said of the blood, represented by the holy Eucharist, which continues to show forth the death and atoning sacrifice of the Son of God, till He comes. See the Note on verse 6.

Verse 9. If we receive the witness of men] Which all are obliged to do; and which is deemed a sufficient testimony to truth in numberless cases. The witness of God is greater, He can neither be deceived, nor deceive; but man may deceive, and be deceived.

Verse 10. He that believeth on the Son of God] This is God's witness to a truth, the most important and interesting to mankind. God has witnessed that whosoever believeth on his Son shall be saved, and have everlasting life; and shall have the witness of it in himself; the Spirit bearing witness with his spirit that he is a child of God. To know, to feel his sin forgiven, to have the testimony of this in the heart from the Holy Spirit Himself, is the privilege of every true believer in Christ.

Verse 11. This is the record] The great truth to which the Spirit, the water, and the blood, bear testimony. God hath given us eternal life; a right to endless glory, and a meetness for it. And this life is in his Son. It comes by and through Him. He is its Author and its Purchaser. It is only in and through HIM. No other scheme of salvation can be effectual; God has provided none other; and in such a case a man's invention must be vain.

Verse 12. He that hath the Son hath life] As the eternal life is given IN the Son of God; it follows, that it cannot to be enjoyed without Him. No man can have it without having Christ; therefore, he that hath the Son, hath life: and he that hath not the Son hath not life. It is in vain to expect eternal glory, if we have not Christ in our heart. The indwelling Christ gives both a title to it, and a meetness for it. This is God's record. Let no man deceive himself here: an indwelling Christ and GLORY. No indwelling Christ, no glory. God's record must stand.

Verse 13. That ye may know that ye have eternal life] I write to show your privileges; to lead you into this holy of holies; to show what believing on the Son of God is, by the glorious effects it produces; it is not a blind reliance for, but an actual enjoyment of, salvation. Christ living, working, and reigning, in the heart.

And that ye may believe] That is, continue to believe; for Christ dwells in the heart only by FAITH; and faith lives only by LOVE; and love continues only by OBEDIENCE. He who BELIEVES, loves; and he who LOVES, obeys. He who obeys, loves; he who loves, believes; he who believes, has the witness in himself; he who has this witness, has Christ in his heart, the hope of glory; and he who believes, loves, and obeys, has Christ in his heart, and is a man of prayer.

Verse 14. This is the confidence] Παρρησια, the liberty of access and speech; that if we ask any thing according to his will; that is, which He has promised in His word; His word is a revelation of His will, in the things which concern the salvation of man. All that God has promised we are justified in expecting; and what He has promised, and we expect, we should pray for. Prayer is the language of the children of God. He who is begotten of God, speaks this language. He calls God Abba, Father, in the true spirit of supplication. Prayer is the language of dependence on God; where the soul is dumb, there is neither life, love, nor faith. Faith and prayer are not boldly to advance claims upon God:—we must take heed that what we ask and believe for, is agreeable to the revealed will of God. What we find promised, that we may plead.

Verse 15. And if we know that he hear us] Seeing we are satisfied that He hears the prayer of faith, requesting the things which Himself has promised; we know, consequently, that we have the petitions, the answer to the petitions, that we desired of him; for He cannot deny himself: and we may consider them as sure as if we had them; and we shall have them as soon as we plead for and need them. We are not to ask to-day, for mercy that we now need, and not receive it till to-morrow, or some future time. God gives it to him who prays, when it is needful.

Verse 16. A sin which is not unto death] This is an extremely difficult passage, and has been variously interpreted. What is the sin not unto death, for which we should ask, and life shall be given to him that commits it? And what is the sin unto death, for which we should not pray?

I shall note three of the chief opinions on this subject.

1. It is supposed that there is here an allusion to a distinction in the Jewish law, where there was חטאה למותה chatah lemothah, "a sin unto death;" and חטאה לא למותה chatah lo lemothah, "a sin not unto death;" that is, 1. A sin, or transgression, to which the law had assigned the punishment of death; such as idolatry, incest, blasphemy, breach of the sabbath, and the like. And, 2. A sin not unto death, i. e. transgressions of ignorance, inadvertence, &c. and such as, in their own nature, appear to be comparatively light and trivial. That such distinctions did exist in the Jewish synagogue both Schoettgen and Carpzovius have proved.

2. By the sin not unto death, for which intercession might be made; and unto death, for which prayer might not be made; we are to understand transgressions of the civil law of a particular place, some of which must be punished with death, according to the statutes; the crime admitting of no pardon: others might be punished with death, but the magistrate had the power of commuting the punishments, i. e. of changing death into banishment, &c. for reasons that might appear to him satisfactory; or at the intercession of powerful friends. To intercede, in the former case, would be useless, because the law would not relax; therefore, they need not not pray for it: but intercession in the latter case might be prevalent, therefore they might pray; and if they did not, the not say that he shall pray for it.

17 [a] All unrighteousness is sin; and there is a sin not unto death.

18 We know that [b] whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God [c] keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not.

19 And we know that we are of God, and [d] the whole world lieth in wickedness.

20 And we know that the Son of God is come, [e] and hath given us an understanding, [f] that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. [g] This is the true God, [h] and eternal life.

21 Little children, [i] keep yourselves from idols. Amen.

[a] Ch. 3. 4.——[b] 1 Pet. 1. 23. ch. 3. 9.——[c] James 1. 27.——[d] Gal. 1. 4. [e] Luke 24. 45.——[f] John 17. 3.——[g] Isa. 9. 6. & 44. 6. & 54. 5. John 20. 28. Acts 20. 28. Rom. 9. 5. 1 Tim. 3. 16. Tit. 2. 13. Heb. 1. 8. [h] Ver. 11, 12, 13.——[i] 1 Cor. 10. 14.

person might suffer the punishment of death. This opinion, which has been advanced by Rosenmüller, intimates, that men should feel for each other's distresses, and use their influence in behalf of the wretched; nor ever abandon the unfortunate, but where the case is utterly hopeless.

3. The sin unto death means a case of transgression, particularly of grievous backsliding from the life and power of godliness, which God determines to punish with temporal death; while at the same time He extends mercy to the penitent soul. The disobedient prophet, 1 Kings xiii. 1—32. is, on this interpretation, a case in point: many others occur in the history of the church, and of every religious community. The sin not unto death, is any sin which God does not choose thus to punish. This view of the subject is that taken by the late Reverend J. Wesley, in a sermon, intituled A Call to Backsliders.—WORKS, Vol. X. pag. 92.

I do not think the passage has any thing to do with what is termed the sin against the Holy Ghost; much less with the Popish doctrine of purgatory; nor with sins committed before and after baptism, the former pardonable, the latter unpardonable, according to some of the fathers. Either of the last opinions (viz. 2. and 3.) make a good sense; and the first (1.) is not unlikely; the apostle may allude to some maxim or custom in the Jewish church, which is not now distinctly known. However, this we know, that any penitent may find mercy through Christ Jesus; for through Him every kind of sin may be forgiven to man, except the sin against the Holy Ghost; which I have proved no man can now commit.—See the Note on Matt. xii. 31, 32.

Verse 17. All unrighteousness is sin] Πασα αδικια, every act contrary to justice:—is sin; is a transgression of the law, which condemns all injustice.

Verse 18. Whosoever is born—begotten of God, sinneth not] This is spoken of adult Christians: they are cleansed from all unrighteousness; consequently from all sin, chap. i ver. 7, 9.

Keepeth himself] That is, in the love of God, Jude 21, by building up himself on his most holy faith, and praying in the Holy Ghost. And that wicked one, the devil, toucheth him not; finds nothing of his own nature in him, on which he can work; Christ dwelling in his heart by faith.

Verse 19. We know that we are of God] Have the fullest proof of the truth of Christianity, and of our own reconciliation to God, through the death of His Son.

The whole world lieth in wickedness] Εν τω πονηρω κειται, lieth in the wicked one; is embraced in the arms of the devil, where it lies fast asleep, and carnally secure, deriving its heat and power from its infernal fosterer. What a truly awful state! And do not the actions, tempers, propensities, opinions, and maxims, of all worldly men, prove and illustrate this? "In this short expression," says Mr. Wesley, "the horrible state of the world is painted in the most lively colours: a comment on which we have in the actions, conversations, contracts, quarrels, and friendships, of worldly men." Yes, their ACTIONS are opposed to the law of God; their CONVERSATIONS shallow, simulous, and false; their CONTRACTS forced, interested, and deceitful; their QUARRELS puerile, ridiculous, and ferocious; and their FRIENDSHIPS hollow, insincere, capricious, and fickle. All, all, the effect of their lying in the arms of the wicked one; for thus they become instinct with his own spirit; and because they are of their father the devil, therefore his lusts they will do.

Verse 20. We know that the Son of God is come] In the flesh, and has made His soul an offering for sin. And hath given us an understanding; a more eminent degree of light than we ever enjoyed before; for as He lay in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him unto us; and He hath besides given us a spiritual understanding, that we may know Him who is true; even the TRUE GOD; and get eternal life from Him through His Son, IN whom we are by faith, as the branches in the vine, deriving all our knowledge, light, life, love, and fruitfulness, from Him. And it is through this revelation of Jesus, that we know the ever-blessed and glorious Trinity; and the Trinity, Father, Word, and Holy Ghost, in the eternal undivided unity of the ineffable Godhead.

he concludes with the same affectionate feeling with which he commenced.

Keep yourselves from idols] Avoid the idolatry of the Heathens; not only have no false gods, but have the true God. Have no idols in your houses; none in your churches; none in your hearts. Have no object of idolatrous worship; no pictures, relics, consecrated tapers, wafers, crosses, &c. by attending to which your minds may be divided, and prevented from worshipping the infinite Spirit, in spirit and in truth.

The apostle, says Dr. Macknight, cautioned his disciples against going with the Heathens into the temple of their idol gods, to eat of their feasts upon the sacrifices they had offered to these gods; and against being present at any act of worship which they paid them; because, by being present, they participated of that worship, as it is plain from what St. Paul has written on the subject, 1 Cor. viii. 10. where see the Notes.

That is a man's idol or god, from which he seeks his happiness; no matter whether it be Jupiter, Juno, Apollo, Minerva, Venus, or Diana; or pleasure, wealth, fame, a fine house, superb furniture, splendid equipage, medals, curiosities, books, titles, human friendships, or any earthly or heavenly thing, God, the supreme good, only excepted. That is a man's idol which prevents him from seeking and finding his ALL in God.

Wiclif ends this epistle thus, My little sones, kepe ye you fro mawmitis, i. e. puppets, dolls, and such like; for thus Wiclif esteemed all images employed in religious worship. They are the dolls of a spurious Christianity; and the drivellings of religion in nonage, and dotage. Protestants, keep yourselves from such mawmets!

Amen, so be it! So let it be! And so it shall be, God being our Helper, for ever and ever!

Παντα δοκιμαζετε, το καλον κατεχετε. 1 Thess. v. 21.

The seventh verse of first JOHN, chapter the fifth, has given rise to more theological disputes than any other portion of the Sacred Writings. Advocates and antagonists have arisen in every quarter of the civilized world; but the dispute has been principally confined to the Unitarians of all classes, and those called Orthodox: the former asserting that it is an interpolation, and the latter contending that it is a part of the original text of St. John. It is asserted that (one excepted, which shall be noticed by and by,) all the Greek MSS. written before the invention of printing, omit the passage in dispute. How the seventh and eighth verses stand in these, may be seen in the following view, where the words included between brackets, are those which are wanting in the MSS.

Οτι τρεις εισιν οι μαρτυρουντες [εν τω ουρανω, ο πατηρ, ο λογος, και το αγιον πνευμα· και ουτοι οι τρεις εν εισι. Και τρεις εισιν οι μαρτυρουντες εν τη γη] το πνευμα, και το υδωρ, και το αιμα· και οι τρεις εις το εν εισι.

Of all the MSS. yet discovered which contain this Epistle, amounting to one hundred and twelve; three only, two of which are of no authority, have the text, viz.

1. The Codex Guelpherbytanus G. which is demonstrably a MS. of the seventeenth century, for it contains the Latin translation of Beza, written by the same hand, and therefore of no use or importance in sacred criticism.

2. The Codex Ravianus, or Berolinensis, which is a forgery, and only a copy of the Greek text in the Complutensian Polyglott, printed in 1514; and so close an imitation of it, that it copies even its typographical errors; hence, and from the similarity of the letters, it appears to have been forged, that it might pass for the original MS. from which the Complutensian text was taken. In this MS. some various readings are inserted from the margin of Stevens's edition of 1550.

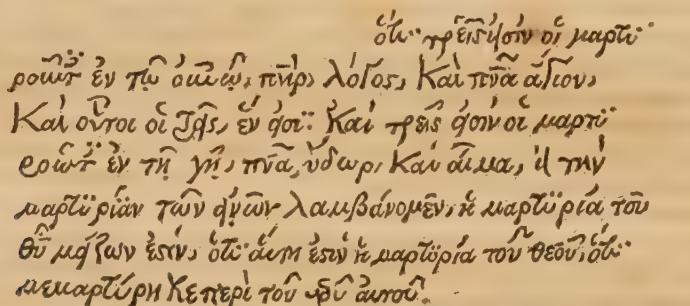
3. The Codex Montfortii, or Codex Dublinensis, cited by Erasmus, under the title of Codex Britannicus, in Trinity College, Dublin. This may be said to be the only genuine MS. which contains this text; as no advocate of the sacred doctrine contained in the disputed passage would wish to lay any stress whatever on such evidence as the two preceding ones afford. Michaelis roundly asserts, Vol. IV. pag. 417. of his Introductory Lectures, that this MS. was written after the year 1500. This, I scruple not to affirm, is a perfectly unguarded assertion, and what no man can prove. In 1790, I examined this MS. myself; and though I thought it to be comparatively modern, yet I had no doubt that it existed before the invention of printing, and was never written with an intention to deceive. I am rather inclined to think it the work of an unknown bold critic, who formed a text from one or more MSS. in conjunction with the Vulgate, and was by no means sparing of his own conjectural emendations; for it contains many various readings which exist in no other MS. yet discovered. But how far the writer has in any place, faithfully copied the text of any ancient MS. is more than can be determined. To give the reader a fair view of this subject, I here subjoin what I hope I may call a perfect fac simile of the seventh and eighth verses, as they exist in this MS. copied by the accurate hand of the Rev. Dr. Barrett, the present learned librarian of Trinity College.

FAC SIMILE

of 1 John v. 7, 8, and 9.

From the Codex Montfortii in Trinity College, Dublin.



When I examined the original myself, though I took down a transcript, yet I neglected to take a fac simile. That no mistake might be made in a matter of so much importance, I got a fac simile, and after it was engraved, had it collated with the MS. by Dr. Barrett himself, and the plate finished according to his last corrections; so that I hope it may be said, every jot and every tittle belonging to the text, are here fairly and faithfully represented; nothing being added, and nothing omitted. I have examined this MS. since, and have not been able to detect any inaccuracy in my fac simile. To it I have annexed a perfect fac simile of the same words, as they stand in the Complutensian Polyglott, which the curious reader will be glad to see associated with the other, as they are properly the only Greek authorities on which the authenticity of the text of the Three Witnesses depends.

FAC SIMILE

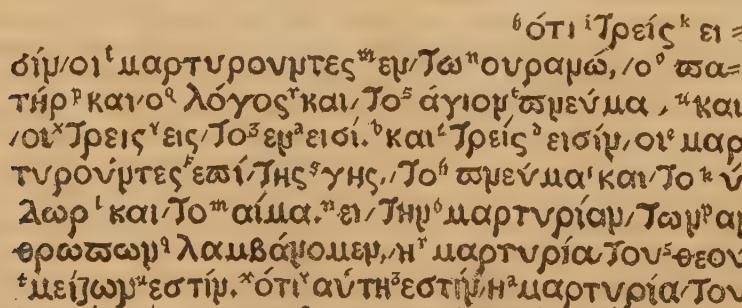
of 1 John v. 7, 8, and 9. from the Editio Princeps of the Greek Testament, printed at Complutum in 1514.



It may be necessary to observe,

First, that the five first lines of the fac simile of the text in the Complutensian edition are at the top of the opposite page to that on which the other four lines are found. The alphabetical letters, mingled with the Greek text, are those which refer to the corresponding words in the Latin text, printed in a parallel column in the Complutensian Polyglott, and marked with the same letters to ascertain more easily the corresponding Greek and Latin words, for the benefit, I suppose, of learners. The column containing the Latin text, which is that of the Vulgate, is not introduced here, being quite unnecessary.

Secondly—The sixth and seventh lines of the fac simile of the Codex Montfortii belong to the second page of that leaf on which the other five lines are written.

This MS. is a thick duodecimo written on paper, without folios. There is an inscription in it, in these words, Sum Thomæ Clementis, olim fratris Froyhe. On this inscription Dr. Barrett remarks: "It appears Froyhe was a Franciscan; and I find in some blank leaves in the book these words written, (by the same hand, in my opinion, that wrote the MS.) Ιησους μαρια Φραγχισκος; by the latter, I understand the founder of that order." If St. Francis d'Assise be here meant, who was the founder of the order of Franciscans, and the inscription be written by the same who wrote the MS. then the MS. could not have been written before the thirteenth century, as St. Francis founded his order in 1206, and died in 1226, and consequently proves that the MS. could not have been written in the eleventh century, as Mr. Martin of Utrecht, and several others, have imagined.

Much stress has been laid on the dots over the ι and υ which frequently appear in this MS. Montfaucon has observed, Palæographia Græca, pag. 33, that such dots were in use a thousand years ago; hence the advocates of the antiquity of the Codex Montfortii have inferred, that this MS. must have been written at least in the tenth or eleventh century. But, as these are found in modern MSS. (see Palæog. pag. 324. 333.) they are therefore no proof of antiquity. In Michaelis's Introduction, Vol. II. pag. 286, where he is describing the MSS. of the Greek Testament, he gives the text in question as it is supposed to exist in the Codex Montfortii, in which two dots appear over every iota and upsilon in the whole five lines there introduced; but, on comparing this of Michaelis with the fac simile here produced, the Reader will at once perceive that the arrangement is false, and the dotting egregiously inaccurate. Deceived by this false representation, Dr. Marsh, (now bishop of Llandaff,) in his Notes on the passage, pag. 754, observes, "That no MS. written in small characters, before the twelfth century, has these dots. That a MS. written in the twelfth century has these dots sometimes on the iota, but never on the upsilon; but MSS. written in the fourteenth century have these dots on both letters, but not in all cases. Now as these letters are dotted always in the Codex Montfortianus, but not always in the MSS. of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, and still less often in those of the twelfth century, we may infer that the Codex Montfortianus is at least as modern as the fifteenth century."

On this quotation I beg leave to make a few remarks.

Dr. Marsh says, "That no MS. written in small letters, previous to the twelfth century, has these dots." This excellent critic has only to consult the Palæographia Græca, pag. 293, in which he will find No. 1. a fac simile of one of the Colbert MSS. (No. 4954,) written A. D. 1022, where the iota appears thrice dotted:—and in No. 2, on the same page, another fac simile of a MS. written A. D. 1045, the iota is dotted in the word ιησου.—Ibid. page 283, (No. 7,) a MS. written in 986, has the iota twice dotted in the word Ιερμενει.—Ibid. pag. 275, (No. 2,) a MS. of the ninth or beginning of the tenth century, has the iota dotted in αχαιας:—and in No. 3, a specimen of the Codex Regius, (No. 2271,) written A. D. 914, the iota is dotted in θειχην.—Ibid. pag. 271, (No. 4,) written about 890, the iota is dotted in ιερων: and in Spec. V. in the word ποιια. See also Ibid. pag. 320, No. 3. another of the Colbert MSS. (4111,) written A. D. 1236, where the iota is dotted seven times. All these specimens are taken from MSS. written in small characters; and, as the dates show, (the last excepted,) long before the twelfth century. As to these dots being more frequent in manuscripts of the fifteenth than those of the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth centuries, I cannot say much: it is certain they became more frequent towards the fourteenth century than they were in the twelfth; and yet this was not a general case. In two well-written manuscripts now before me, one of which I suppose to be of the fourteenth century, and the other of the fifteenth, these dots often occur, but they are by no means regular. I have noticed several pages in the oldest manuscript where they occur but once; and in other pages they may be met with ten or twelve times. On the contrary, in the more recent manuscript, whole pages occur without one of them; and where they do occur, they are much less frequent than in the former. So that it rather appears from this evidence, that they began to disappear in the fifteenth century. Dr. Marsh, misled by the specimen in Michaelis, Vol. II. pag. 286, says, "The letters in question are always dotted in the Codex Montfortianus." By referring to the fac simile, the Reader will be able at once to correct this mistake. The iota in the fac simile occurs thirty times, and is dotted only in five instances: and the upsilon occurs nineteen times, and is dotted only in seven.

But arguments for or against the age of any MS. on account of such dots, are futile in the extreme; as the most ancient MSS. have them not only on the iota and upsilon, but upon several other letters, as may be seen in the Codex Alexandrinus, the Codex Rescriptus published by Dr. Barrett, and the Codex Bezæ; in the latter of which they seem to occur more frequently than they do even in the Codex Montfortii.

On the evidence of these dots, Mr. Martin of Utrecht supposed the Dublin manuscript to be as old as the eleventh century; and on the same evidence Dr. Marsh argues, "That it is at least as modern as the fifteenth." Both these judgments are too hastily formed: medio tutissimus ibis, is the best counsel in such a case; the manuscript is more likely to have been a production of the thirteenth than of either the eleventh or fifteenth. The former date is as much too high, as the latter is too low; the zeal of the critics for and against this controverted text having carried them, in my opinion, much too far on either side.

In comparing the writing of the Codex Montfortii, with the different specimens given by Montfaucon in the Palæographia Græca, it appears to approach nearest to that on page 320, No. 4, which was taken from one of the Colbert manuscripts, (No. 845,) written in the year of our Lord 1272, which I am led to think may be nearly about the date of the Codex Montfortii: but on a subject of so much difficulty, where critics of the first rank have been puzzled, I should be sorry to hazard any more than an opinion, which the Reader is at liberty to consider either true or false, as may seem best to his own judgment.

Though a conscientious advocate for the sacred doctrine contained in the disputed text, and which I think expressly enough revealed in several other parts of the Sacred Writings; I must own the passage in question stands on a most dubious foundation. All the Greek manuscripts (the Codex Montfortii alone excepted) omit the passage: so do all the ancient Versions, the Vulgate excepted: but in many of the ancient MSS. even of this version, it is wanting. There is one in the British Museum, of the tenth or eleventh century, where it is added by a more recent hand in the margin: for it is wanting also in the text. It is also variously written in those manuscripts which retain it. This will appear more plainly by comparing the following extracts, taken from four manuscripts of the Vulgate in my own possession:

1. ———Quoniam tres sunt qui testimonium dant in cœlo, Pater, Verbum, et Spiritus Sanctus, et hii tres unum sunt. Et tres sunt qui testimonium dant in terrâ, Spiritus, Sanguis, et Aqua. This is the same with the text in the Complutensian Polyglott: only aqua is placed before sanguis.

2. ———Quoniam tres sunt qui testimonium dant in terrâ, Spiritus, Aqua, et Sanguis, et tres unum sunt. Et tres sunt qui testimonium dant in cœlo, Pater, Verbum, et Spiritus Sanctus, et hii tres unum sunt.

3. ———Quoniam tres sunt qui testimonium dant in cœlo, Pater, et Filius, et Spiritus Sanctus, et hii tres unum sunt. Et tres sunt qui testimonium dant in terrâ, Spiritus, Aqua, et Sanguis.

4. ———Quoniam tres sunt qui testimonium dant in terrâ, Spiritus, Aqua, et Sanguis; et hii tres unum sunt. Et tres sunt qui testimonium dant in cœlo, Pater, et Filius, et Spiritus Sanctus, et hii tres unum sunt.

5. ———Quoniam tres sunt qui testimonium dant in terrâ, Spiritus, Aqua, et Sanguis, et tres sunt qui testimonium perhibent in cœlo, Pater, Verbum, et Spiritus Sanctus, et hi tres unum sunt.

This last I took from an ancient manuscript in Marsh's library, St. Patrick's, Dublin.

In what has been denominated the Editio Princeps of the Latin Bible, and supposed to have been printed between 1455 and 1468, the text stands thus: Quoniam tres sunt qui testimonium dant in cœlo, Pater, Verbum, et Spiritus Sanctus, et hii tres unum sunt. Et tres sunt qui testimonium dant in terrâ. Spiritus, Aqua, et Sanguis, et tres unum sunt.

In the Bible printed by Fradin and Pinard, Paris, 1497, fol. the text is the same with No. 2, only instead of testimonium dant, it reads dant testimonium.

The Reader will observe, that in Nos. 2, 4, and 5, the eighth verse is put before the seventh, and that 3 and 4 have filius instead of verbum. But both these readings are united in an ancient English manuscript of my own, which contains the Bible from the beginning of Proverbs to the end of the New Testament, written on thick strong vellum, and evidently prior to most of those copies attributed to Wiclif.

For three ben that geven witnessing in heven the Fadir, the Word or Sone and the Hooly Goost, and these three ben oon. And three ben that geven witnessing in erthe, the Spirit, Water and Blood, and these three ben oon.

As many suppose the Complutensian editors must have had a manuscript or manuscripts which contained this disputed passage, I judge it necessary to add the note which they subjoin at the bottom of the page, by which (though nothing is clearly expressed) it appears they either had such a manuscript, or wished to have it thought they had such. However, the note is curious, and shows us how this disputed passage was read in the most approved manuscripts of the Vulgate extant in the thirteenth century, when St. Thomas Aquinas wrote, from whom this note is taken. The following is the whole note literatim:

"Sanctus Thomas in expositione secunde Decretalis de sumâ Trinitate et fide Catholicâ, tractans istum passum contra Abbatem Joachim; ut tres sunt qui testimonium dant in celo, Pater, Verbum, et Spiritus Sanctus; dicit ad litteram verba sequentia. Et ad insinuandam unitatem trium personarum subditur. Et hii tres unum sunt. Quodquidem dicitur propter essentie Unitatem. Sed hoc Joachim perverse trahere volens ad unitatem charitatis et consensus, inducebat consequentem auctoritatem. Nam subditur ibidem: et tres sunt qui testimonium dant in terrâ, S. Spiritus: Aqua: et Sanguis. Et in quibusdam libris additur: et hii tres unum sunt. Sed hoc in veris exemplaribus non habetur: sed dicitur esse appositum ab hereticis arrianis ad pervertendum intellectum sanum auctoritatis premisse de unitate essentie trium personarum. Hec beatus Thomas ubi supra."

If the Complutensian editors translated the passage into Greek from the Vulgate; it is strange they made no mention of it in this place, where they had so fair an opportunity while speaking so very pointedly on the doctrine in question; and forming a note for the occasion, which is indeed the only theological note in the whole volume. It is again worthy of note, that when these editors found an important various reading in any of their Greek manuscripts, they noted it in the margin: an example occurs 1 Cor. xiii. 3. and another, ibid. xiv.—why was it then that they took no notice of so important an omission as the text of the Three Witnesses, if they really had no manuscript in which it was contained; Did they intend to deceive the Reader, and could they possibly imagine that the knavery could never be detected? If they designed to deceive, they took the most effectual way to conceal the fraud, as it is supposed they destroyed the manuscripts from which they printed their text; for the story of their being sold in 1749 to a rocket-maker, (see Michaelis, Vol. II. pag. 440,) is every way so exceptionable and unlike the truth, that I really wonder there should be found any person who would seriously give it credit. The substance of this story, as given by Michaelis, is as follows, "Professor Moldenhawer, who was in Spain in 1784, went to Alcala on purpose to discover these MSS. but was informed that a very illiterate librarian, about thirty-five years before, who wanted room for some new books, sold the ancient vellum MSS. as useless parchments, to one Toryo, who dealt in fireworks, as materials for making rockets." It is farther added, that "Martinez, a man of learning, heard of it soon after they were sold, and hastened to save these treasures from destruction; but it was too late, for they were already destroyed, except a few scattered leaves, which are now in the library." On the whole of this account, it is natural to ask the following questions:—Is it likely that the management of so important a trust should be in the hands of a person so ignorant, that he could not know a Hebrew or Greek MS. from a piece of useless parchment? Could such a person be entrusted to make a purchase of new books for the library, for which he wanted room? or if they were purchased by the trustees of the library, is it likely they would leave the classification and arrangement of these to such a Goth as this librarian is said to be? Would such a librarian, or indeed any other, be permitted to dispose of any part of the library which he might deem useless? If Mr. Martinez heard of it soon after they were sold, and hastened to rescue them, is it likely that almost the whole should have been converted into rockets before he got to the place; when we are informed they were so many as to cost originally 4000 aurei; and that even the price which the librarian sold them for, was so considerable, that it had to be paid at two different instalments? Was it possible that in so short a time, the rocket-maker could have already consumed the whole? The whole account is so improbable that I cannot help saying Credat Judæus Apella;—non ego.

It is more likely the manuscripts were destroyed at first, or that they are still kept secret, to prevent the forgery (if it be one) of the text of the Three Witnesses from being detected; or the librarian already mentioned, may have converted them to his own use. If they were not destroyed by the Complutensian editors, I should not be surprised if the same manuscripts should come to light in some other part of the world, if not in the Alcala library itself.

It is worthy of remark, that Luther never admitted the text of the Three Witnesses into any of the editions of his translation: it is true, it was afterward added, but never during his lifetime. On this Professor Michaelis makes the following observation:—"It is uncandid in the extreme for one Protestant to condemn another for rejecting 1 John v. 7. since it was rejected by the author of our reformation." Any conscientious Trinitarian may innocently hesitate to receive the feebly supporting evidence of this disputed text, in confirmation of a doctrine, which he finds it his duty and interest to receive, on the unequivocal testimony of various other passages in the book of God.

Professor Griesbach, who does not appear to be an enemy to the doctrine, and who has carefully and critically examined all the evidences and arguments pro and con, has given up the text as utterly defenceless; and thinks, that to plead for its authenticity is dangerous. "For if," says he, "a few dubious, suspicious, and modern evidences, with such weak arguments as are usually adduced, are sufficient to demonstrate the authenticity of a reading, then there remains no longer any criterion by which the spurious may be distinguished from the genuine; and, consequently, the whole text of the New Testament is unascertained and dubious."

Much stress has been laid on Bengel's defence of this text: Michaelis has considered the strength of his arguments in a candid and satisfactory manner.

"The ancient writers which Bengel has produced in favour of 1 John v. 7. are all Latin writers; for he acknowledges that no Greek father has ever quoted it. Now, if no objection could be made to Bengel's witnesses, and the most ancient Latin fathers had quoted in express terms the whole of the controverted passage, their quotations would prove nothing more than that the passage stood in their Manuscripts of the Latin version; and therefore that the Latin version contained it in a very early age. But it will appear upon examination, that their evidence is very unsatisfactory. The evidence of Tertullian, the oldest Latin writer, who has been quoted in favour of 1 John v. 7. is contained in the following passage of his treatise against Praxeas, Book I. chap. 25. Ita connexus Patris in Filio et Filii in Paracleto, tres efficit cohærentes, alterum ex altero, qui tres unum sunt, non unus, quomodo dictum est, Ego et Pater unum sumus. Hence it is inferred, that because tres unum sunt stand at present in the Latin version, 1 John v. 7. these words stood there likewise in the time of Tertullian, and that Tertullian borrowed them from the Latin version. But this inference is wholly without foundation; for Tertullian does not produce these words as a quotation, and the bare circumstance of his using the expression tres unum sunt, will not prove that he found that expression in the Bible. On the contrary, it is evident from what immediately follows, that 1 John v. 7. was not contained in the Latin version when Tertullian wrote. For, in proof of this assertion, qui tres unum sunt, he immediately adds, quomodo dictum est, Ego et pater unum sumus, which is a quotation from St. John's Gospel, chap. v. 30. Now as this quotation relates only to the Father and the Son, and not to the Holy Ghost, surely Tertullian would not have proved the unity of the Trinity from this passage, if 1 John v. 7. which is much more to the purpose, had then been contained in any Latin manuscript, with which he was acquainted. At any rate, the mere use of the words tres unum sunt, affords no argument in favour of the controverted passage; and if any inference is to be deduced from their agreement with our present copies of the Latin version in 1 John v. 7. it is this, that the person, who afterward fabricated this passage, retained an expression which had been sanctioned by the authority of Tertullian. So much for the evidence of this Latin father, the only writer of the second century, to whom appeal has been made.

"Of the Latin Fathers who lived in the third century, Cyprian alone has been produced as evidence in favour of 1 John. v. 7. From the writings of Cyprian two passages have been quoted as proofs that 1 John v. 7. was contained in his Manuscript of the Latin version. The one is from his Epistle to Jubaianus, where Cyprian writes thus: Si baptizari quis apud hæreticum potuit, utique et remissam consecutus est, et sanctificatus est, et templum Dei factus est; quæro cujus Dei? Si Creatoris, non potuit, qui in eum non credidit; si Christi, non hujus potest fieri templum qui negat Deum Christum: si Spiritus Sancti, cum tres unum sint, quomodo Spiritus Sanctus placatus esse ei potest, qui aut Patris aut Filii inimicus est? Here it must be observed, that the words cum tres unum sint, though inserted in the later editions of Cyprian's works, are not contained in that edition which was published by Erasmus: and even if they were genuine, they will prove nothing more than the same words just quoted from Tertullian. The other passage, which is much more to the purpose, is in Cyprian's treatise, De Unitate Ecclesiæ, where Cyprian writes thus: Dicit dominus, Ego et Pater unum sumus; et iterum de Patre et Filio, et Spiritu Sancto, scriptum est; et tres unum sunt. Now, admitting that the words et tres unum sunt, were quoted by Cyprian from 1 John v. 7. I seriously ask every impartial judge, whether a passage found in no ancient Greek manuscript, quoted by no Greek Father, and contained in no other ancient version than the Latin, is therefore to be pronounced genuine, merely because one Latin Father of the Three first centuries, who was bishop of Carthage, where the Latin version only was used, and where Greek was unknown, has quoted it? Under these circumstances should we conclude, that the passage stood originally in the Greek autograph of St. John? Certainly not: for the only inference which could be deduced from Cyprian's quotation would be this, that the passage had been introduced into the Latin version so early as the third century.

"The preceding answer is sufficient to invalidate Cyprian's authority in establishing the authenticity of 1 John v. 7. on the supposition that Cyprian really quoted it: but that he did so, is more than any man can prove. The words tres unum sunt, are contained not only in the seventh, but also in the eighth verse, which is a part of the ancient and genuine text of St. John; and therefore it is at least possible, that Cyprian took them not from the seventh, but from the eighth verse. It is true that he says, these words are written of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; whereas tres unum sunt, in the eighth verse, relates only to the Spirit, the water, and the blood. But it must be observed, that the Latin Fathers interpreted spiritus, aqua, et sanguis, not literally, but mystically; and some of them really understood by these words, Pater, Filius, et Spiritus Sanctus, taking aqua in the sense of Pater, sanguis in the sense of Filius, and spiritus in the sense of Spiritus Sanctus.

"This is expressly asserted by Eucherius in his Quæstiones N. T. Difficiliores; for, after having quoted 1 John v. 8. thus, Tria sunt, quæ testimonium perhibent, aqua, sanguis, et spiritus; he adds, soon after, plures tamen hic ipsam interpretatione mysticâ intelligere Trinitatem; aqua, Patrem, sanguine, Christum, spiritu, Spiritum Sanctum manifestare. But if Cyprian really thought, that aqua, sanguis, et spiritus, 1 John v. 8. denoted Pater, Filius, et Spiritus Sanctus, he might say of tres unum sunt, ver. 8. that it was written, de Patre, et Filio, et Spiritu Sancto. And that he actually did so, that he quoted not ver. 7. but understood ver. 8. mystically, appears from the following passage of Facundus, who lived in the neighbourhood of Carthage, and consequently used the same Latin version as Cyprian. Johannes Apostolus in epistolâ suâ de Patre, et Filio, et Spiritu Sancto, sic dicit; Tres sunt qui testimonium dant in terrâ, spiritus, aqua, et sanguis, et hi tres unum sunt: in spiritu significans Patrem, &c. Quod Johannis Apostoli testimonium beatus Cyprianus, in epistolâ, sive libro, quem de Trinitate scripsit, de Patre, et Filio, et Spiritu Sancto, dicum intelligit." Facundus then quotes the words of Cyprian, which are the subject of our present inquiry. From the preceding passage it is manifest that 1 John v. 7. was unknown to Facundus; for he proves the doctrine of the Trinity by a mystical interpretation of ver. 8. and appeals to the authority of Cyprian, who, he says, gave the same interpretation. But if 1 John v. 7. was unknown to Facundus, who lived in the same country as Cyprian, used the same Latin version, and wrote almost three centuries later, it is incredible that 1 John v. 7. was already introduced in the Latin manuscripts which Cyprian used. Consequently we must conclude, that the assertion of Facundus is true, and that the words of Cyprian contain not a quotation from 1 John v. 7. but a mystical application of 1 John v. 8. This is further confirmed by Augustin, who was likewise an African bishop, lived a hundred years later than Cyprian, and still knew nothing of 1 John v. 7. for he has never quoted this passage, not even where he speaks of the Trinity, but he has mystically applied the eighth verse.—MICHAELIS, Vol. VI. p. 420.

The writers that have quoted it are comparatively recent, or spurious; for those of any note, which have been supposed, from certain expressions in their works, to have had reference to this verse, have been proved by learned men to have had no such text in view. A great and good man has said, that "the seventh verse, in conjunction with the sixth and eighth, has been quoted by Tertullian, Cyprian, and an uninterrupted train of Fathers." But a more incautious assertion was never made, as the preceding list will prove; and the evidence on the subject I have most carefully examined. Bengel, who was an excellent critic and a good man, endeavoured to defend it, but without success; and Michaelis demonstrated its spuriousness from Bengel's five concessions. Knittel has defended its authenticity with much critical acumen; Hezelius with great sagacity; David Martin, of Utrecht, with much honest simplicity; and Dean Travis with abundance of zeal, without much knowledge of the critical bearings of the subject. Socinians need not glory that it is indefensible, and that honest Trinitarians give it up: for the sacred doctrine which it appears to express is diffused through every part of the Scriptures; and is as inexpugnable as a rock of adamant: and will live and prevail in the church of Christ while sun and moon endure, and till time shall be swallowed up in eternity.

SUMMARY of the whole evidence relative to the THREE HEAVENLY WITNESSES, 1 John v. 7.

1. ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTEEN Greek MSS. are extant, containing the First Epistle of John; and the Text in question is wanting in 112. It only exists in the Codex Montfortii, (a comparatively recent MS.) already described. The Codex Ravianus, in the Royal Library at Berlin, is a transcript taken from the Complutensian Polyglott.

2. All the GREEK Fathers omit the verse, though many of them quote both ver. 6. and ver. 8. applying them to the Trinity, and Divinity of Christ, and the Holy Spirit; yea, and endeavour to prove the doctrine of the Trinity from ver. 6. and ver. 8. without referring to any such verse as the 7th, which, had it existed, would have been a more positive proof, and one that could not have been overlooked.

3. The first place the verse appears in Greek, is in the Greek translation of the Acts of the Council of Lateran, held A. D. 1215.

4. Though it is found in many Latin copies; yet it does not appear that any written previously to the TENTH CENTURY contains it.

5. The LATIN Fathers do not quote it, even where it would have greatly strengthened their arguments; and where, had it existed, it might have been most naturally expected.

6. Vigilius, bishop of Tapsum, at the conclusion of the fifth century, is the first who seems to have referred expressly to the Three heavenly Witnesses: but his quotation does not agree with the present Text, either in words or in sense; and besides, he is a writer of very little credit, nor does the place alleged appear, to learned men, to be genuine.

7. The Latin writers who do refer to the Three heavenly Witnesses vary greatly in their quotations; the more ancient placing the eighth verse before the seventh; and very many omitting, after the earthly witnesses, the clause these three are one. Others who insert these three are one, add in Christ Jesus—others use different terms.

8. It is wanting in all the ancient VERSIONS, the Vulgate excepted: but the more ancient copies of this have it not; and those which have it vary greatly among themselves, as may be seen in the specimens already produced.

9. It is wanting in the first edition of Erasmus, A. D. 1516, which is properly the editio princeps of the Greek Text.

It is wanting also in his second edition 1519; but he added it in the third from the Codex Montfortii.

It is wanting in the editions of Aldus, Gerbelius, Cephalius, &c.

It is wanting in the German translation of LUTHER, and in all the editions of it published during his lifetime.

It is inserted in our early English translations, but with marks of doubtfulness, as has already been shown.

10. In short, it stands on no authority sufficient to authenticate any part of a revelation, professing to have come from God.

See Griesbach's Dissertation on this verse at the end of the second volume of his Greek Text. Halæ et Londini, 1806.

In defence of this verse, see "Archdeacon Travis's Letters to Gibbon:" and on the other side, "Professor Porson's Answer to Travis." The latter has left nothing further to be said on the subject, either in vindication or reply.

JOHN.

THE authority of the first Epistle of John being established, little need be said concerning either the second or third, if we regard the language and the sentiment only; for these are so fully in accord with the first, that there can be no doubt that he who wrote one wrote all the three. But it must not be concealed that there were doubts entertained in the primitive church that the two latter were not canonical. And so late as the days of Eusebius, who lived in the fourth century, they were ranked among those writings which were then termed αντιλεγομενα, not received by all, or contradicted, because not believed to be the genuine productions of the apostle John.

It is very likely that, being letters to private persons, they had for a considerable time been kept in the possession of the families to which they were originally sent; and only came to light perhaps long after the death of the apostle, and the death of the Elect Lady or Kyria, and Gaius or Caius, to whom they were addressed. When first discovered, all the immediate vouchers were gone; and the church of Christ, that was always on its guard against imposture, and especially in relation to writings professing to be the work of apostles, hesitated to receive them into the number of canonical Scriptures, till it was fully satisfied that they were divinely inspired. This extreme caution was of the utmost consequence to the Christian faith; for, had it been otherwise, had any measure of what is called credulity prevailed, the church would have been inundated with spurious writings; and the genuine faith greatly corrupted, if not totally destroyed.

The number of apocryphal Gospels, Acts of Apostles, and Epistles, which were offered to the church in the earliest ages of Christianity is truly astonishing: we have the names of at least seventy-five gospels, which were offered to, and rejected by, the church; besides Acts of Peter, Acts of Paul and Thecla, third Epistle to the Corinthians, Epistle to the Laodiceans, Book of Enoch, &c. some of which are come down to the present time, but are convicted of forgery by the sentiment, the style, and the doctrine.

The suspicion, however, of forgery, in reference to the Second Epistle of Peter, Second and Third of John, Jude, and the Apocalypse, was so strong, that in the third century, when the Peshito Syriac Version was made, these books were omitted; and have not since been received into that Version to the present day; which is the Version still used in the Syrian churches. But the later Syriac Version, which was made A. D. 508, and is called the Philoxenian, from Philoxenus, bishop of Hierapolis, under whose direction it was formed from the Greek, by his rural bishop, Polycarp, and was afterward corrected and published by Thomas of Charkel, in 616, contains these, as well as the other canonical books of the New Testament.

From the time that the language, sentiments, and doctrines, of these two Epistles were critically examined, no doubts were entertained of their authenticity; and at present they are received by the whole Christian church throughout the world: for, although they are not in the ancient Syriac Version, they are in the Philoxenian; and concerning their authenticity I believe the Syrian churches have at present no doubts.

Dr. Lardner observes, that the First Epistle was received and quoted by Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna, contemporary with the apostle; by Papias, who himself had been a disciple of St. John; by Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, and many others. The Second Epistle is quoted by Irenæus, was received by Clement of Alexandria, mentioned by Origen and Dionysius of Alexandria; is quoted by Alexander, bishop of Alexandria. All the three Epistles were received by Athanasius; by Cyril, of Jerusalem; by the Council of Laodicea; by Epiphanius; by Jerome; by Ruffinus; by the third Council of Carthage; by Augustin; and by all those authors who received the same canon of the New Testament that we do. All the Epistles are in the Codex Alexandrinus, in the Catalogues of Gregory of Nazianzen, &c. &c.

Thus we find, they were known and quoted at a very early period; and have been received as genuine by the most respectable fathers, Greek and Latin, of the Christian church. Their being apparently of a private nature might have prevented their more general circulation at the beginning, kept them for a considerable time unknown, and prevented them from being reckoned canonical. But such a circumstance as this, cannot operate in the present times.

As to the time in which this Epistle was written, it is very uncertain. It is generally supposed to have been written at Ephesus between A. D. 80 and 90; but of this there is no proof: nor are there any data in the Epistle itself, to lead to any probable conjecture relative to this point. I have placed it at A. D. 85, but would not wish to pledge myself to the correctness of that date.

NOTES ON II. JOHN.

Verse 1. The elder] John the apostle, who was now a very old man, generally supposed to be about ninety: and therefore he uses the term ὁ πρεσβυτερος, presbyter, or elder, not as the name of an office, but as designating his advanced age. He is allowed to have been the oldest of all the apostles, and to have been the only one who died a natural death.

This title led some of the ancients to attribute this Epistle to a person called John the Presbyter, a member of the church at Ephesus; and not to John the apostle. But this is a groundless supposition.

The elect lady] Εκλεκτῃ Κυριᾳ. As Κυρια, kyria, may be the feminine of Κυριος, kyrios, lord, therefore it may signify lady; and so several, both ancients and moderns, have understood it. But others have considered it the proper name of a woman, Kyria; and that this is a very ancient opinion, is evident from the Peshito Syriac, the oldest version we have, which uses it as a proper name, ܩܘܪܝܐ koureea, as does also the Arabic, كوريا kooreea.

Some have thought that Eclecta was the name of this matron; from the word εκλεκτη, which we translate elect, and which here signifies the same as excellent, eminent, honourable, or the like. Others think that a particular church is intended, which some suppose to be the church at Jerusalem, and that the elect sister, ver. 13. means the church at Ephesus: but these are conjectures which appear to me to have no good ground. I am satisfied that no metaphor is here intended; that the Epistle was sent to some eminent Christian matron, not far from Ephesus; who was probably deaconess of the church; who, it is likely, had a church at her house; or at whose house the apostles, and travelling evangelists, frequently preached, and were entertained. This will appear more probable in the course of the notes.

Whom I love in the truth] Whom I love as the Christian religion requires us to love one another.

And not I only] She was well known in the churches: many had witnessed or heard of her fidelity, and partook of her hospitality; so that she had a good report of all Christians in that quarter.

Verse 2. For the truth's sake] On account of the gospel.

Which dwelleth in us] By the grace which it has proclaimed.

And shall be with us] For God will preserve not only the Christian religion, but its truth, all its essential doctrines, for ever. And they that abide in the truth, shall go whither that truth leads; i. e. to glory. The Armenian has a strange reading here. "For the truth's sake which dwelleth in us," because it is also with you; and ye shall be with us for ever. But this is supported by no other version; nor by any MS.

Verse 3. Grace be with you] This is addressed to her, her household, and probably that part of the church which was more immediately under her care.

The Son of the Father] The apostle still keeps in view the miraculous conception of Christ; a thing which the Gnostics absolutely denied—a doctrine which is at the ground-work of our salvation.

Verse 4. That I found of thy children walking in truth] I have already supposed this Christian matron to be mother of a family, probably a widow, for no mention is made of her husband; and that she was also a deaconess in the church, and one in whose house the travelling evangelists preached; and where they were entertained. The children mentioned here may either be her own children, or those members of ceived a commandment from the Father.

5 And now I beseech thee, lady, [a] not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, [b] that we love one another.

6 And [c] this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, That, [d] as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it.

7 For [e] many deceivers are entered into the world, [f] who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. [g] This is a deceiver and an antichrist.

8 [h] Look to yourselves, [i] that we lose not those things which we have [k] wrought, but that we receive a full reward.

9 [l] Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

10 If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, [m] neither bid him God speed:

the church which were under her care; or some of both. The apostle was glad to find, probably by an epistle sent from herself to him, or from the information of some of the itinerant evangelists, that the work of God was prospering in the place where she lived, and also in her own household. He does not say, that all were walking in the truth, but εν των τεκνων some of her children; there was a growing and spreading work; and there were many adversaries who strove to pervert them who had already believed; and perhaps were successful in drawing several away from their simplicity.

Verse 5. That which we had from the beginning] The commandment to love one another was what they had heard from the first publication of Christianity, and what he wishes this excellent woman to inculcate on all those under her care. The mode of address here shows that it was a person, not a church, to which the apostle wrote.

Verse 6. And this is love] That is, our love is shown and proved by our walking according to the commandments of God: for love is the principle of obedience.

Verse 7. For many deceivers, &c.] Of these he had spoken before, see 1 Epistle, chap. iv. 1, &c. And these appear to have been Gnostics, for they denied that Jesus was come in the flesh. And this doctrine, so essential to salvation, none could deny, but a deceiver and an antichrist. Instead of εισηλθον, are entered in, many excellent MSS. and Versions have εξηλθον, are gone out. The sense is nearly the same.

Verse 8. Look to yourselves] Be on your guard against these seducers: watch, pray, love God and each other, and walk in newness of life.

That we lose not those things which we have wrought] That we apostles, who have been the means of your conversion, may not be deprived of you as our crown of rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Instead of the first person plural, απολεσωμεν, &c. WE lose, &c. many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, read the whole clause in the second person plural, απολεσητε, YE lose, &c. Take heed to yourselves that YE lose not the things which YE have wrought, but that YE receive a full reward. This reading is more consistent and likely, and is supported by at least as good evidence as the other. We find, that if these persons did not keep on their guard, they might lose their salvation, and the apostles their rejoicing, in the day of the Lord Jesus. Even this intimation might put them on their guard. Had the apostle said ye cannot finally fall, what a different effect would it have produced?

Verse 9. Whosoever transgresseth] Παραβαινων, he who passes over the sacred enclosure, or goes beyond the prescribed limits—and abideth not in the doctrine, does not remain within these holy limits, but indulges himself either in excesses of action or passion; hath not God for his Father, nor the love of God in his heart.

Hath both the Father and the Son.] He who abideth in the doctrine of Christ, his body is a temple of the Holy Trinity; and he has communion with the Father, as his Father, and with the Son, as his Saviour and Redeemer.

Verse 10. If there come any unto you] Under the character of an apostle or evangelist, to preach in your house,—And bring not this doctrine, that Jesus is come in the flesh, and has died for the redemption of the world;

Receive him not into your house] Give him no entertainment as an evangelical teacher. Let him not preach under your roof.

Neither bid him God speed.] Και χαιρειν αυτω μη λεγετε. And do not say health to him. Do not salute him with Peace be to thee! The usual salutation among friends, and those of the same religion in the East, is سلام عليكم Salam aleekum. "Peace be to you;" which those of the same religion will use among themselves, but never to strangers, except in very rare cases. This is the case to the present day; and, from what John says here, it was a very ancient custom. We have often seen, that peace among the Hebrews comprehended every spiritual and temporal blessing. The words mean, according to the Eastern use of them, "Have no religious connexion with him: nor act towards him, so as to induce others to believe you acknowledge him as a brother."

Verse 11. Is partaker of his evil deeds.] He that acts towards him as if he considered him a Christian brother, and sound in the faith, puts it in his power to deceive others, by thus apparently accrediting his ministry. No sound Christian should countenance any man as a gospel minister, who holds and preaches erroneous doctrines; especially concerning the Lord Jesus. Nor can any Christian attend the ministry of such teachers, without being criminal in the sight of God. He who attends their ministry is, in effect, bidding them God speed—no matter whether such belong to an established church, or to any congregation of dissenters from it. But what St. John says here does not mean, that we should deny such the common offices of humanity, charity, and mercy. No. In these offices we are equally bound to all men: far less does it intimate that we should persecute such on account of their heretical or heterodox sentiments. No. This right has God given to no man—to no church—to no State. They who persecute others, even for the worst heretical opinions, may expect the heaviest judgments of Almighty God.

There is a remarkable addition here in several MSS. of the Vulgate, and in some printed editions. Ecce prædixi vobis, ut in diem Domini nostri Jesu Christi non confundamini.—"Behold, I have foretold this to you, that ye may not be confounded in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ."

This addition is found in the Edition of Pope Sixtus the Fifth, and in the Complutensian Polyglott: but it is not acknowledged by any of the Versions, nor by any Greek MS.

Verse 12. Having many things to write] That is, I have many things that I might write to thee; but I think it best not to commit them to paper, because I hope to visit thee shortly, and speak fully of those matters, which will be a means of increasing the comfort both of thee and thy family, as well as my own. There is more comfort in mutual interviews among friends than in epistolary correspondence.

Verse 13. The children of thy elect sister] Probably her own sister, who lived at Ephesus; and, being acquainted with the apostle's writing, desired to be thus remembered to her. Elect, both in this and the first verse, signifies excellent, eminent, or honourable. See on verse 1.

Amen is wanting in the most ancient MSS. and in most of the Versions: but η χαρις μετα σου and μεθ' υμων, grace be with thee, or with you, is found in several MSS. and Versions.

There are other Subscriptions; but, like the above, are worthy of little regard.

This Epistle is more remarkable for the spirit of Christian love which it breathes than for any thing else. It contains scarcely any thing that is not found in the preceding; and out of the thirteen verses there are at least eight, which are found, either in so many words, or in sentiment, precisely the same with those of the First Epistle. The most remarkable part of it, is the tenth and eleventh verses, relative to the orders concerning the heretical teacher: and from them we see how such teachers were treated in the apostolic church. They held no communion with them; afforded them no support, as teachers; but did not persecute them.

On this model the conduct of all Christians should be formed, relative to the teachers of false doctrine in general. To go thus far, we have apostolical authority; to go farther, we have none. And let us still remember, in all cases it is our duty to love even our enemies; and consequently, to do them any act of humanity and mercy.

[a] 2 John 1.——[b] Or, truly.

This Epistle being of nearly the same complexion with the former, and evidently written about the same time, and incontestably by the same person; it is not necessary to give it any particular Preface, as the subject of the authenticity of all the three Epistles has been treated already so much at large, not only in the Introduction to them, but in the Notes in general.

This, and the preceding Epistle are, by Dr. Lardner, supposed to have been written between A. D. 80 and 90 There are no notes of time in the Epistles themselves, to help us to fix any date; therefore all is conjecture concerning the time in which they were written: but, to me, it appears as likely that they were written before the destruction of Jerusalem, as after; for it is scarcely to be supposed that so signal a display of the justice of God, and such a powerful argument in favour of Christianity, and of the truth of Christ's predictions, could be passed unnoticed, and unappealed to, by any of the inspired persons who wrote after that event. However, where there is no positive evidence, conjecture is useless.

NOTES ON THE THIRD EPISTLE OF JOHN.

Verse 1. The elder] See on the first verse of the preceding Epistle, and also the Preface.

The well-beloved Gaius] Γαιος, Gaius, is the Greek mode of writing the Roman name Caius; and thus it should be rendered in European languages.

Several persons of the name of Caius occur in the New Testament.

1. In the Epistle to the Romans, ch. xvi. 23. St. Paul mentions a Caius who lived at Corinth, whom he calls his host, and the host of the whole church.

2. In 1 Cor. i. 14. St. Paul mentions a Caius who lived at Corinth, whom he had baptized: but this is probably the same with the above.

3. In Acts xix. 29. mention is made of a Caius who was a native of Macedonia, who accompanied St. Paul, and spent some time with him at Ephesus. This is probably a different person from the preceding: for the description given of the Caius who lived at Corinth, and was the host of the whole church there, does not accord with the description of the Macedonian Caius, who, in the very same year, travelled with St. Paul, and was with him at Ephesus.

4. In Acts xx. 4. we meet a Caius of Derbe, who was likewise a fellow-traveller of St. Paul. This person cannot be the Corinthian Caius; for the host of the church at Corinth would hardly leave that city to travel into Asia; and he is clearly distinguishable from the Macedonian Caius by the epithet Δερβαιος, of Derbe.

5. And, lastly, there is the Caius who is mentioned here, and who is thought by some critics to be different from all the above; for, in writing to him, St. John ranks him among his children, which seems, according to them, to intimate, that he was converted by this apostle.

Now, whether this Caius was one of the persons just mentioned, or whether he was different from them all, is difficult to determine; because Caius was a very common name. Yet, if we may judge from the similarity of character, it is not improbable that he was the Caius who lived at Corinth, and who is styled by St. Paul the host of the whole church; for hospitality to his Christian brethren was the leading feature in the character of this Caius to whom St. John wrote; and it is on this very account that he is commended by the apostle. Besides, St. John's friend lived in a place where this apostle had, in Diotrephes, a very ambitious and tyrannical adversary; and that there were men of this description at Corinth is evident enough from the two Epistles to the Corinthians; though St. Paul has not mentioned their names.—See Michaelis.

The probability of this Caius being the same with the Corinthian Caius has suggested the thought that this Epistle was sent to Corinth; and, consequently, that the Second

Epistle was sent to some place in the neighbourhood of that city. But I think the distance between Ephesus, where St. John resided, and Corinth, was too considerable for such an aged man, as St. John is represented to be, to travel, whether by land or water. If he went by land, he must traverse a great part of Asia, go through Thrace, Macedonia, Thessaly, and down through Greece, to the Morea; a most tedious and difficult journey. If he went by water, he must cross the Ægean Sea, and navigate among the Cyclades Islands, which was always a dangerous voyage. Now, as the apostle promises, both in the Second and in this Epistle, to see the persons shortly to whom he wrote, I take it for granted that they could not have lived at Corinth, or any where in the vicinity of that city. That St. John took such a voyage Michaelis thinks probable: "for since Corinth lay almost opposite to Ephesus, and St. John, from his former occupation, before he became an apostle, was accustomed to the sea, it is not improbable that the journey or voyage which he proposed to make was from Ephesus to Corinth."

In answer to this I would just observe, 1. That the voyage was too long and dangerous for a man at John's advanced age to think of taking. 2. That John had never been accustomed to any such sea as the Ægean; for the Sea of Galilee, or Sea of Tiberias, on which, as a fisherman he got his bread, was only an inconsiderable fresh-water lake; and his acquaintance with it could give him very few advantages for the navigation of the Ægean Sea, and the danger of coasting the numerous islands dispersed through it.

Verse 2. I wish above all things] Περι παντων ευχομαι, above all things I pray that thou mayest prosper, and be in health, και υγιαινειν; to which one MS. adds, εν αληθειᾳ. which gives it a different meaning, viz. that thou mayest be sound in the truth. The prayer of St. John for Caius, includes three particulars:—1. Health of body. 2. Health of soul: and, 3. Prosperity in secular affairs. That thou mayest PROSPER—and be in HEALTH—as thy soul PROSPERETH. These three things, so necessary to the comfort of life, every Christian may in a certain measure expect: and for them every Christian is authorized to pray. And we should have more of all three, if we devoutly prayed for them.

It appears from the last clause, that the soul of Caius was in a very prosperous state.

Verse 3. When the brethren came] Probably the same of whom he speaks in the fifth and following verses; and who appear to have been itinerant evangelists.

The truth that is in thee] The soundness of thy faith, and the depth of thy religion.

Verse 4. To hear that my children] From this it has been inferred, that Caius was one of St. John's converts; and consequently not the Corinthian Caius, who was converted, most probably, by St. Paul. But the apostle might use the term children here, as implying those who were immediately under his pastoral care; and, being an old man, he had a right to use such terms in addressing his juniors, both in age and grace: and there is much both of propriety and dignity in the appellation, coming from such a person.

Verse 5. Thou doest faithfully] Πιστον ποιεις. Kypke thinks that πιστον is put here for πιστιν, and that the phrase signifies to keep or preserve the faith, or to be bound by the faith: or to keep one's engagements. Thou hast acted as the faith, the Christian religion, required thee to act, in all that thou hast done, both to the brethren at home, and to the strangers, the itinerant evangelists, who, in the course of their travels, have called at thy house. There is not a word here about the pilgrims and penitential journeys, which the Papists contrive to bring out of this text.

Verse 6. Which have borne witness of thy charity] Of thy love and benevolence.

Before the church] The believers at Ephesus; for to this church the apostle seems to refer.

Whom, if thou bring forward] If thou continue to assist such, as thou hast done, thou shalt do well.

The brethren of whom St. John speaks, might have been apostles; the strangers, assistants to these apostles, as John Mark was to Barnabas. Both were itinerant evangelists.

After a godly sort] Αξιως του Θεου, worthy of God; and in such a way as He can approve. Let all churches, all congregations of Christians, from whom their ministers and preachers can claim nothing by law, and for whom the State makes no provision, lay this to heart: let them ask themselves, Do we deal with these in a manner worthy of God, and worthy of the profession we make? Do we suffer them to lack the bread that perisheth; while they minister to us, with no sparing hand, the bread of life? Let a certain class of religious people, who will find themselves out, when they read this Note, consider whether, when their preachers have ministered to them their certain or stated time, and are called to go and serve other churches, they send them forth in a manner worthy of God? making a reasonable provision for the journey which they are obliged to take. In the itinerant ministry of the apostles it appears that each church bore the expenses of the apostle to the next church, or district, to which he was going to preach the word of life. So it should be still in the mission and itinerant ministry.

Verse 7. For his name's sake they went forth] For the sake of preaching the gospel of the grace of God, and making known JESUS to the heathen.

Taking nothing of the Gentiles.] Receiving no emolument for their labour; but in every respect showing themselves to be truly disinterested. Sometimes, and on some especial occasions, this may be necessary: but the labourer is worthy of his hire, is the maxim of the Author of Christianity. And those congregations of Christians are ever found to prize the gospel most, and profit most by it, who bear all expenses incident to it; and vice versâ.

But some construe εξηλθον they went out, with απο των εθνων from the Gentiles, or rather by the Gentiles; and give the passage this sense: they went out; i. e. were driven out by the Gentiles, taking nothing with them; i. e. leaving all their property behind, so that they were in a state of great destitution. A curious reading here, εθνικων heathenish men, for εθνων Gentiles, which latter might imply those who were converted from among the Gentiles, while the sense of the other term seems to be restrained to those who were still unconverted, may seem to strengthen the above interpretation: and, although the construction seems rather harsh, yet it is not, on the whole, unlikely. The reading above referred to is that of the most ancient and reputable MSS. That to be driven out, or expelled, is one Scriptural meaning of the verb εξερχομαι, see Matt. viii. 32. and when they were come out, οι δε εξελθοντες, and when they were DRIVEN OUT. Ib. xii. 43. When the unclean spirit is gone out, εξελθη, is DRIVEN OUT. See Mark v. 13. and vii. 29. The devil is gone out of thy daughter, εξεληλυθε, is EXPELLED. Ib. ix. 29. This kind can come forth by nothing, εν ουδενι δυναται εξελθειν, can be DRIVEN OUT by nothing but by prayer and fasting. Luke viii. 2. Mary Magdalene, out of whom went, αφ' ης δαιμονια επτα εξεληλυθει, out of whom were CAST seven demons. See also 1 John ii. 19. Rev. iii. 12. and Schleusner, in voc εξερχομαι.

Verse 8. We therefore ought to receive such] Those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake; and have professed the truth at the hazard of their lives, and the loss of all their worldly substance. Instead of απολαμβανειν, to receive, the most ancient and reputable MSS. have υπολαμβανειν, to take up, undertake for, or kindly receive.

Fellow-helpers to the truth] And thus encourage the persecuted, and contribute to the spread and maintenance of the gospel.

Verse 9. I wrote unto the church] The church where Caius was. But Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence, φιλοπρωτευων, who loves the presidency, or chief place in the church. He was doubtless an officer in the church; at least a deacon, probably a bishop; and being one, he magnified himself in his office: he loved such eminence, and behaved himself haughtily in it.

Receiveth us not.] Does not acknowledge the apostolical authority. As some MSS. supply αν after εγραψα and several judicious critics believe it is implied, the translation will run thus:—I would have written to the church to receive these men kindly; but Diotrephes, who affects the presidency, and into whose hands, if I wrote to the church, my letter must come, receiveth us not, would not acknowledge my authority to interfere with any of the matters of his church; and, therefore, I have written unto thee whose love to the brethren, and general hospitality are well known, that thou wouldest receive those strangers and persecuted followers of our common Lord.

Verse 10. If I come, I will remember] I will show him the authority, which, as an apostle of Jesus Christ, I possess.

the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church.

11 Beloved, [a] follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. [b] He that doeth good is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God.

Prating against us] Diotrephes might have been a converted Jew, who was unwilling that the Gentiles should be received into the church; or a Judaizing Christian, who wished to incorporate the law with the gospel, and calumniated the apostles who taught otherwise. This haughty and unfeeling man would give no countenance to the converted Gentiles; so far from it, that he would not receive any of them himself, forbad others to do it, and excommunicated those who had been received into the church by the apostles. This appears to be the meaning of neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church. He had the complete dog in the manger principle; he would neither do, nor let do. And when good was done that he did not approve, he endeavoured to undo it.

Verse 11. Follow not that which is evil] Μη μιμου το κακον, do not imitate that wicked man; i. e. the conduct of Diotrephes: be merciful, loving, and kind. For, whatever profession any man may make, it will ever appear that he who doeth good is of God; he alone is the person who uses rightly the grace received from God, and he alone shall enjoy the Divine approbation.

While he that doeth evil] He who is unfeeling, unmerciful, unkind, hath not seen God; has no proper knowledge of that God whose NAME is mercy, and whose NATURE is love.

Verse 12. Demetrius hath good report] Perhaps another member of the church where Caius was; or he might have been one of those whom the apostle recommends to Caius; or, possibly, the bearer of this letter from John to Caius. He seems to have been an excellent person; all testified of his righteousness; the truth, Christianity itself, bore testimony to him; and the apostles themselves added theirs also.

Verse 13. I had many things to write] That is, I have many things that I might write; but having the hope of seeing thee shortly, I will not commit them to paper. Ink and pen are here mentioned; paper and ink in the preceding Epistle.

Verse 14. Peace be to thee] May thou possess every requisite good, both of a spiritual and temporal kind.

Our friends salute thee] Desire to be affectionately remembered to thee. Greet the friends by name; remember me to all those with whom I am acquainted, as if I had specified them by name. This is a proof to me that this Epistle was not sent to Corinth; where, it is not likely, John ever was; and where, it is not likely, he had any particular acquaintances, unless we could suppose he had seen some of them when he was an exile in Patmos, an island in the Ægean sea.

For other particulars concerning John, the Reader is requested to refer to the Preface to his gospel.

Instead of φιλοι, and φιλους, friends, the Codex Alexandrinus, and several others, read αδελφοι, and αδελφους, brethren. The former (friends) is a very singular appellation, and nowhere else found in Scripture; the latter is of frequent occurrence.

I have already shown, in the Preface to those epistles termed Catholic, that the word καθολικος is not to be taken here, and elsewhere in these epistles, as signifying universal, but canonical; for it would be absurd to call an epistle universal that was written to a private individual. We seldom hear this Epistle quoted but in the reproof of lordly tyrants, or prating troublesome fellows in the church. And yet the Epistle contains many excellent sentiments, which, if judiciously handled, might be very useful to the church of God. But it has been the lot both of the minor prophets and the minor epistles to be generally neglected; for, with many readers, bulk is every thing; and no magnitude, no goodness.

END OF THE NOTES ON THE THIRD EPISTLE OF ST. JOHN.

PREFACE

JUDE.

IN the Preface to the Epistle of James several things have been said relative to Jude, the brother of James, the supposed author of this Epistle ; and to that Preface the Reader is requested to refer. What is farther necessary to be said on the author, and the authenticity of this Epistle, I shall take the liberty to borrow principally from Michaelis.

" If James and Jude, whom the evangelists call brothers of Jesus, were in fact only cousins, or relations, as some suppose ; and were sons, not of Joseph, but of Alphæus, these two persons were the same as the two brothers, James and Jude, who were apostles. And, in this case, Jude, the author of our Epistle, was the same as the apostle Jude, the brother of James, who was son of Alphæus. On the other hand, if the James and the Jude, whom the evangelists call brothers of Jesus, were not the two brothers of this name, who were apostles, but were the sons of Joseph, the reputed father of Jesus, we have then two different persons of the name of Jude, either of which might have written this Epistle. And, in this case, we have to examine whether the Epistle was written by an apostle of the name of Jude, or by Jude, the brother-in-law of Christ.

" The author of the Epistle himself has assumed neither the title of apostle of Jesus Christ, nor of brother of Jesus Christ ; but calls himself only ' Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James.' Now, as the author distinguishes himself by the title ' brother of James,' and this was a common name among the Jews, he undoubtedly meant some eminent person of this name, who was well known at the time when he wrote, or the title ' brother of James' would have been no mark of distinction. We may infer, therefore, that the author of this Epistle was the brother, either of the apostle James, the son of Alphæus, or of James, called the brother of Jesus, or of both, if they were one and the same person.

"The first question, therefore, to be asked is, Was the author of this Epistle the apostle Jude? or, was he brother of James, the son of Alphæus? Now, I have already observed, that this question must be answered in the affirmative, if James and Jude, who were called brothers of Jesus, were the same as the two brothers James and Jude, who were apostles. And it may be answered in the affirmative, even if they were different persons: for Jude, the author of our Epistle, had, in either case, a brother of the name of James, and therefore might, in either case, call himself Jude, the brother of James. I say the question may be answered in the affirmative, even if the apostle Jude was a different person from Jude, called the brother of James. But whether it ought, in this case, to be answered in the affirmative, is another matter; and I really believe that it ought not: for if the Jude, who wrote this Epistle, had been himself an apostle, and brother of an apostle, he would hardly have called himself, in an Epistle written to Christians, simply 'Jude, the brother of James,' without adding the title apostle. It is true, that the apostle Jude, who was brother of James, is called by St. Luke Ιούδας Ιακώβου: but St. Luke gives him this title merely to distinguish him from another apostle of this name, who was called Iscariot. Now, the author of this Epistle could have no motive for distinguishing himself from Judas Iscariot, who had hanged himself many years before this Epistle was written. The name of Jude was very common among the Jews; and therefore, the author of this Epistle wished to distinguish himself from other persons who were so called. But James was likewise a very common name; and, therefore, if the author had been an apostle, he surely would have preferred an appellation which would have removed all doubts to an appellation which left it at least uncertain whether he was an apostle or not: I grant that the omission of this title does not necessarily prove that the author of our Epistle was not an apostle, for Paul has omitted it in four of his Epistles; in the Epistle to the Philippians, in both Epistles to the Thessalonians, and in that to Philemon. But St. Paul was sufficiently known without this title; whereas the author of the Epistle in question felt the necessity of a distinguishing appellation, as appears from the very title which he has given himself, of 'brother of James.' Besides, at the time when this Epistle was written, only one apostle of the name of James was then alive; for the elder James, the son of Zebedee, had been beheaded many years before. If then the author of this Epistle had only given to our brother James the title of apostle, he would thus likewise have clearly ascertained who he himself was. But since he has no more given to his brother, than to himself, the title of apostle, I think it highly probably that neither of them were apostles.

"The next question to be asked, therefore, is, Was the Jude, who wrote our Epistle, the same person as the Jude whom the evangelists call brother of Jesus? and who, according to the opinion which I think the most defensible, was in this sense brother of Jesus; that he was son of Joseph by a former wife, and therefore not his own brother, but only brother-in-law of Jesus. Now that our Epistle was written by a person of this description, appears to me highly probable; and on this supposition we may assign the reason why the author called himself 'brother of James;' for, if he was the brother-in-law of Jesus, his brother James was the person, who during so many years had presided over the church at Jerusalem, was well known both to Jews and Christians, and appears to have been more celebrated than either of the apostles called James. It will be objected, perhaps, that the very same reasons which I have alleged, to show that an apostle of the name of Jude would have assumed his proper title, will likewise show, that a person who was called brother of Jesus, would have done the same, and styled himself brother of Jesus. To this I answer, that if he was the son of Joseph, not by Mary, but by a former wife, and Jude believed in the immaculate conception, he must have been sensible that, though to all outward appearance, he was brother-in-law to Jesus, since his own father was the husband of Jesus's mother, yet, in reality, he was no relation of Jesus. On the other hand, if Jude, called the brother of Jesus, was the son of Joseph, not by a former wife, but by Mary, as Herder asserts, I do not see how the preceding objection can be answered; for, if Jesus and Jude had the same mother, Jude might, without the least impropriety, have styled himself 'brother of Jesus,' or 'brother of the Lord;' and this would have been a much more remarkable and distinguishing title than that of brother of James. A third question still remains to be asked on this subject. The apostle whom St. Luke calls Jude, is called Thaddæus by St. Matthew and St. Mark, as I have already observed. But the apostle of the Syrians, who first preached the gospel at Edessa, and founded a church there, was named Thaddæus, or Adæus. It may be asked, therefore, whether the author of our Epistle was Thaddæus, the apostle of the Syrians? But the answer is decisive; the old Syriac Version does not contain this Epistle; consequently, it is highly probable, that Adai, or Adæus, was not the author; for an Epistle written by the great apostle of the Syrians would surely have been received into the canon of the Syrian church."

The most accurate critics have been unable to determine the time when, and the persons to whom this Epistle was written; so that much concerning these points, as well as the author of the Epistle, must remain undecided.

"I am really unable to determine," says Michaelis, "who the persons were to whom this Epistle was sent; for no traces are to be discovered in it, which enable us to form the least judgment on this subject; and the address, with which this Epistle commences, is so indeterminate, that there is hardly any Christian community, where Greek was spoken, which might not be denoted by it. Though this Epistle has a very great similarity to the Second Epistle of Peter, it cannot have been sent to the same persons, namely, the Christians who resided in Pontus, &c. because no mention is made of them in this Epistle. Nor can it have been sent to the Christians of Syria, and Assyria, where Jude preached the Gospel, if he be the same person as the apostle of the Syrians; for in this case the Epistle would not have been written in Greek, but in Syriac or Chaldee, and would certainly have been received into the old Syriac Version.

"With respect to the date of this Epistle, all that I am able to assert is, that it was written after the Second Epistle of Peter: but how many years after, whether between 64 and 66 as Lardner supposes, or between 70 and 75 as Beausobre and L'Enfant believe; or, according to Dodwell and Cave, in 71 or 72, or so late as the year 90, as is the opinion of Mill, I confess I am unable to determine, at least from any certain data. The expression, 'in the last time,' which occurs ver. 18. as well as in 2 Pet. iii. 3. is too indeterminate to warrant any conclusion, respecting the date of this Epistle; for though, on the one hand, it may refer to the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, it may, on the other hand, refer to a later period, and denote the close of the apostolic age; for in the First Epistle of St. John a similar expression occurs, which must be taken in this latter sense. The inference, therefore, that the Epistle of St. Jude was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, which some commentators have deduced from the above-mentioned expression, on the supposition that it alluded to that event, then approaching, is very precarious; because it is drawn from premises which are themselves uncertain. However, there is some reason to believe, on other grounds, that this Epistle was not written after the destruction of Jerusalem: for, as the author has mentioned, ver. 5—8, several well known instances of God's justice in punishing sinners, which Peter had already quoted in his Second Epistle, to the same purpose; he would probably, if Jerusalem had been already destroyed at the time he wrote, have not neglected to add to his other examples this most remarkable instance of Divine vengeance, especially as Christ himself had foretold it.

"Lardner indeed, though he admits the similarity of the two epistles, still thinks it a matter of doubt, whether St. Jude had ever seen the Second Epistle of St. Peter; his reason is, that 'if St. Jude had formed a design of writing, and had met with an Epistle of one of the apostles very suitable to his own thoughts and intentions, he would have forborne to write.'

"To this argument I answer:

"1. If the Epistle of St. Jude was inspired by the Holy Ghost, as Lardner admits; the Holy Ghost certainly knew, while he was dictating the Epistle to St. Jude, that an Epistle of St. Peter, of a like import, already existed. And if the Holy Ghost, notwithstanding this knowledge, still thought that an Epistle of St. Jude was not unnecessary; why shall we suppose that St. Jude himself would have been prevented writing by the same knowledge?

"2. The Second Epistle of St. Peter was addressed to the inhabitants of some particular countries; but the address of St. Jude is general. St. Jude therefore might think it necessary to repeat, for general use, what St. Peter had written only to certain communities.

"3. The Epistle of St. Jude is not a bare copy of the Second Epistle of St. Peter; for in the former, not only several thoughts are more completely unravelled than in the latter, but several additions are made to what St. Peter had said, for instance, ver. 4, 5, 9, 16.

"Eusebius, in his catalogue of the books of the New Testament, places the Epistle of St. Jude among the αντιλεγομενα, contradicted, or Apocryphal books, in company with the Epistle of St. James, the Second Epistle of St. Peter, and the Second and Third of John.

"But Origen, who lived in the third century, though he speaks in dubious terms of the Second Epistle of St. Peter, has several times quoted the Epistle of St. Jude, and has spoken of it as an Epistle on which he entertained no doubt. In his commentary on St. Matthew, when he comes to chap. xiii. 55. where James, Joses, Simon, and Jude, are mentioned; he says Jude wrote an Epistle of few lines indeed, but full of the powerful words of the heavenly grace, who at the beginning says, 'Jude the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James.' This is a very clear and unequivocal declaration of Origen's opinion; and it is the more remarkable, because he says nothing of the Epistle of St. James, though the passage, Matt. xiii. 55. afforded him as good an opportunity of speaking of this Epistle, as it did of the Epistle of St. Jude. Nay, Origen carries his veneration for the Epistle of St. Jude so far, that in his treatise De Principiis, lib. III. cap. 2. he quotes an Apocryphal book, called the Assumption of Moses, as a work of authority; because a passage from this book had been quoted by St. Jude. In one instance, however, in his commentary on St. Matthew, Origen speaks in less positive terms; for there he says, 'if any one receive the Epistle of St. Jude, &c.' Tertullian, in whose works Lardner could discover no quotation from the Second Epistle of St. Peter, describes the Epistle of St. Jude as the work of an apostle: for in his treatise, De cultu fæminarum, chap. 3. he says, 'Hence it is, that Enoch is quoted by the apostle Jude.'

"Clement of Alexandria, in whose works likewise Lardner could find no quotation from the Second Epistle of St. Peter, has three times quoted the Epistle of St. Jude, without expressing any doubt whatever. It appears then, that the three ancient Fathers, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Origen, as far as we may judge from their writings, which are now extant, preferred the Epistle of St. Jude to the Second Epistle of Peter. However, I think it not impossible, that if all the writings of these authors were now extant, passages might be found in them which would turn the scale in favour of the latter; and it may be owing to mere accident, that in those parts of their works which have descended to us, more passages, in which they speak decidedly of St. Jude, are to be found, than such as are favourable to the Second Epistle of St. Peter. For I really cannot comprehend, how any impartial man, who has to choose between these two Epistles, which are very similar to each other, can prefer the former to the latter, or receive the Epistle of St. Jude, the contents of which labour under great difficulties; and at the same time consider as dubious, or even reject, the Second Epistle of St. Peter, the contents of which labour under no such difficulties.

"But, it is much more difficult to explain the ninth verse, in which the archangel Michael is said to have disputed with the devil about the body of Moses. The history of this dispute, which has the appearance of a Jewish fable, it is not at present very easy to discover; because the book, from which it is supposed to have been taken by the author of this Epistle, is no longer extant; but I will here put together such scattered accounts of it as I have been able to collect.

"Origen found, in a Jewish Greek book, called the Assumption of Moses, which was extant in his time, this very story related concerning the dispute of the archangel Michael with the devil about the body of Moses. And from a comparison of the relation in his book with St. Jude's quotation, he was thoroughly persuaded that it was the book from which St. Jude quoted. This he asserts without the least hesitation: and in consequence of this persuasion he himself has quoted the Assumption of Moses, as a work of authority, in proof of the temptation of Adam and Eve by the devil. But, as he quoted it merely for this purpose, he has given us only an imperfect account of what this book contained, relative to the dispute about the body of Moses. One circumstance, however, he has mentioned, which is not found in the Epistle of St. Jude, (viz.) that Michael reproached the devil with having possessed the serpent that seduced Eve. In what manner this circumstance is connected with the dispute about the body of Moses will appear from the following consideration:

"The Jews imagined the person of Moses was so holy, that God could find no reason for permitting him to die; and that nothing but the sin committed by Adam and Eve in Paradise, which brought death into the world, was the cause why Moses did not live for ever. The same notions they entertained of some other very holy persons; for instance, of Isai, who, they say, was delivered to the angel of death merely on account of the sins of our first parents; though he himself did not deserve to die. Now, in the dispute between Michael and the devil, about Moses, the devil was the accuser, and demanded the death of Moses. Michael, therefore, replied to him that he himself was the cause of that sin, which alone could occasion the death of Moses. How very little such notions as these agree, either with the Christian theology, or with Moses's own writings, it is unnecessary for me to declare. Besides the account given by Origen, there is a passage in the works of Œcumenius, which likewise contains a part of the story related in the Assumption of Moses, and which explains the reason of the dispute which St. Jude has mentioned concerning Moses's body. According to this passage, Michael was employed in burying Moses; but the devil endeavoured to prevent it, by saying that he had murdered an Egyptian, and was therefore unworthy an honourable burial. Hence, it appears, that some modern writers are mistaken, who have imagined that, in the ancient narrative, the dispute was said to have arisen from an attempt of the devil to reveal to the Jews the burial-place of Moses, and to incite them to an idolatrous worship of his body.

"There is still extant a Jewish book, written in Hebrew, and intituled פטירת משה, that is, 'The Death of Moses;' which some critics, especially De La Rue, suppose to be the same work as that which Origen saw in Greek. Now, if it were this Hebrew book, intituled 'Phetirath Mosheh,' it would throw a great light on our present inquiry; but I have carefully examined it, and can assert, that it is a modern work, and that its contents are not the same as those of the Greek book quoted by Origen. Of the Phetirath Mosheh we have two editions, which contain very different texts; the one was printed at Constantinople in 1518, and reprinted at Venice in 1544 and 1605; the other was published from a manuscript by Gilbert Gaulmyn, who added a translation of both texts, with notes."

To show that neither St. Jude, nor any inspired writer, nor indeed any person in his sober senses, could quote, or in any way accredit, such stuff and nonsense, I shall give the substance of this most ridiculous legend, as extracted by Michaelis; for, as to the Phetirath Mosheh, I have never seen it.

"Moses requests of God, under various pretences, either that he may not die at all; or at least that he may not die before he comes into Palestine. This request he makes in so froward and petulant a manner, as is highly unbecoming, not only a great prophet, but even any man who has expectations of a better life after this. In short, Moses is here represented in the light of a despicable Jew, begging for a continuance of life, and devoid both of Christian faith and Heathen courage: and it is, therefore, not improbable, that the inventor of this fable made himself the model after which he formed the character of Moses. God argues, on the contrary, with great patience and forbearance; and replies to what Moses had alleged relative to the merit of his own good works. Further, it is God who says to Moses, that he must die on account of the sin of Adam; to which Moses answers, that he ought to be excepted, because he was superior in merit to Adam, Abraham, Isaac, &c. In the mean time, Samael, that is, the angel of death, whom the Jews describe as the chief of the devils, rejoices at the approaching death of Moses: this is observed by Michael, who says to him, 'Thou wicked wretch, I grieve, and thou laughest.' Moses, after his request had been repeatedly refused, invokes heaven and earth, and all creatures around him, to intercede in his behalf. Joshua attempts to pray for him; but the devil stops Joshua's mouth, and represents to him, really in Scriptural style, the impropriety of such a prayer. The elders of the people, and with them all the children of Israel, then offer to intercede for Moses: but their mouths are likewise stopped by a million eight hundred and forty thousand devils; which, on a moderate calculation, make three devils to one man. After this, God commands the angel Gabriel to fetch the soul of Moses; but Gabriel excuses himself, saying, that Moses was too strong for him: Michael receives the same order, and excuses himself in the same manner; or, as other accounts say, under pretence that he had been the instructer of Moses, and therefore could not bear to see him die. But this latter excuse, according to the Phetirath Mosheh, was made by Zinghiel, the third angel, who received this command. Samael, that is, the devil, then offers his services: but God asks him how he would take hold of Moses; whether by his mouth, or by his hands, or by his feet; saying, that every part of Moses was too holy for him to touch. The devil, however, insists on bringing the soul of Moses; yet he does not accuse him, for, on the contrary, he prizes him higher than Abraham, Isaac, or Jacob. The devil then approaches towards Moses, to execute this voluntary commission; but, as soon as he sees the shining countenance of Moses, he is seized with a violent pain, like that of a woman in labour: Moses, instead of using the Oriental salutation, 'Peace be with thee,' says to him in the words of Isaiah, (for in this work Moses frequently quotes Isaiah and the Psalms,) 'There is no peace to the wicked.' The devil replies, that he was come, by the order of God, to fetch his soul: but Moses deters him from the attempt, by representing his own strength and holiness; and saying, 'Go, thou wicked wretch, I will not give thee my soul,' he affrights the devil in such a manner that he immediately retires. The devil then returns to God, and relates what had passed; and receives an order to go a second time: the devil answers, that he would go every where God commanded him, even into hell, and into fire, but not to Moses. This remonstrance is, however, of no avail, and he is obliged to go back again: but Moses, who sees him coming with a drawn sword, meets him with his miraculous rod, and gives him such a blow with it that the devil is glad to escape. Lastly, God himself comes; and Moses, having then no further hopes, requests only that his soul may not be taken out of his body by the devil. This request is granted him; Zinghiel, Gabriel, and Michael, then lay him on a bed, and the soul of Moses begins to dispute with God, and objects to its being taken out of a body which was so pure and holy that no fly dared to settle on it: but God kisses Moses, and with that kiss extracts his soul from his body. Upon this, God utters a heavy lamentation; and thus the story in the Phetirath ends, without any mention of a dispute about the burial of Moses's body. This last scene, therefore, which was contained in the Greek book seen by Origen, is wanting in the Hebrew. But in both of these works, Michael, as well as the devil, expresses the same sentiments in respect to Moses: in both works the same spirit prevails; and the concluding scene, which was contained in the Greek book, is nothing more than a continuation of the same story which is contained in the Hebrew."

Had Jude quoted a work like the above, it would have argued no inspiration, and little common sense; and the man who could have quoted it must have done it with approbation; and, in that case, his own composition would have been of a similar stamp. But nothing can be more dissimilar than the Epistle of Jude and the Phetirath Mosheh: the former contains nothing but manly sense, expressed in pure, energetic, and often sublime language; and accompanied, most evidently, with the deepest reverence for God: while the latter is despicable in every point of view, even considered as the work of a filthy dreamer, or as the most superannuated of old wives' fables.

"Lastly," says Michaelis, "besides the quotation which St. Jude has made in the 9th verse, relative to the dispute between Michael and the devil, he has another quotation, ver. 14, 15. likewise from an Apocryphal book called the 'Prophecies of Enoch;' or, if not from any written book, from oral tradition. Now, should it be granted that Enoch was a prophet, though it is not certian that he was; yet, as none of his prophecies are recorded in the Old Testament, no one could possibly know what they were. It is manifest, therefore, that the book called the 'Prophecies of Enoch' was a mere Jewish forgery; and that too a very unfortunate one; since, in all human probability, the use of letters was unknown in the time of Enoch, and consequently he could not have left behind him any written prophecies. It is true, that an inspired writer might have known, through the medium of Divine information, what Enoch had prophesied, without having recourse to any written work on this subject. But St. Jude, in the place where he speaks of Enoch's prophecies, does not speak of them as prophecies, which had been made known to him by a particular revelation; on the contrary, he speaks of them in such a manner as implies that his readers were already acquainted with them."

From all the evidence before him, Michaelis concludes that the canonical authority of this Epistle is extremely dubious; that its author is either unknown, or very uncertain: and he has even doubts that it is a forgery in the name of the apostle Jude. Others have spoken of it in strains of unqualified commendation and praise; and think that its genuineness is established by the matters contained in it; which, in every respect, are suitable to the character of an inspired apostle of Christ. What has led to its discredit with many, is the hasty conclusion, that St. Jude quotes such a work as Phetirath Mosheh; than which nothing can be more improbable, and perhaps nothing more false.

In almost all ages of the church, it has been assailed and defended; but it is, at present, generally received over the whole Christian world. It contains some very sublime and nervous passages, from the 10th to the 13th verse inclusive; the description of the false teachers is bold, happy, and energetic; the exhortation, in verses 20 and 21, is both forcible and affectionate: and the doxology, in verses 24 and 25, well adapted to the subject; and is peculiarly dignified and sublime.

I have done what I could, time and circumstances considered, to present the whole Epistle to the Reader in the clearest point of view; and now must commend him to God and the word of His grace, which is able to build him up and give him an inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith in Jesus.

NOTES ON THE EPISTLE OF JUDE.

Verse 1. Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ] Probably Jude the apostle, who was surnamed Thaddæus and Lebbæus, was son to Alphæus, and brother to James the less, Joses, and Symeon. See Matt. x. 3. and collate with Luke vi. 16. Matt. xiii. 55. See the Preface.

Brother of James] Supposed to be James the less, bishop of Jerusalem, mentioned here, because he was an eminent person in the church. See the Preface to St. James.

To them that are sanctified by God] Instead of ηγιασμενοις, to the sanctified, AB. several others, both the Syriac, Erpen's Arabic, Coptic, Sahidic, Armenian, Æthiopic, and Vulgate, with several of the Fathers, have ηγαπημενοις, to them that are beloved: and before εν Θεῳ, in God, some MSS. with the Syriac and Armenian, have εθνεσιν, to the Gentiles, in God the Father; but although the first is a very probable reading, this is much less so. St. Jude writes to all believers every where, and not to any particular church; hence his Epistle has been called a general Epistle.

Sanctified, signifies here consecrated to God through faith in Christ.

Preserved in [or by] Jesus Christ] Signifies those who continued unshaken in the Christian faith; and implies also, that none can be preserved in the faith, that do not continue in union with Christ, by whose grace alone they can be preserved and called. This should be read consecutively with the other epithets; and should be rather, in a translation, read first than last, to the saints in God the Father, called and preserved by Christ Jesus. Saints is the same as Christians: to become such they were called to believe in Christ, by the preaching of the Gospel; and having believed, were preserved by the grace of Christ in the life and practice of piety.

Verse 2. Mercy unto you] For even the best have no merit, and must receive every blessing and grace in the way of mercy.

Peace] With God and your consciences—Love both to God and man—be multiplied, be unboundedly increased.

Verse 3. When I gave all diligence] This phrase πασαν σπουδην ποιουμενος is a Græcism for being exceedingly intent upon a subject; taking it up seriously with determination to bring it to a good effect. The meaning of the apostle seems to be this, "Beloved brethren, when I saw it necessary to write to you concerning the common salvation, my mind being deeply affected with the dangers to which the church is exposed from the false teachers that are gone out into the world; I found it extremely necessary to write and exhort you to hold fast the truth which you had received, and strenuously to contend for that only faith, which, by our Lord and His apostles, has been delivered to the Christians."

The common salvation] The Christian religion, and the salvation which it brings. This is called common, because it equally belongs to Jews and Gentiles; it is the saving grace of God which has appeared to every man, and equally offers to every human being that redemption which is provided for the whole world.

Some think that St. Jude intimates that he had at first was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that [a] ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.

4 [b] For there are certain men crept in unawares, [c] who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, [d] turning [e] the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and [f] denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

purposed to write to the church at large, on the nature and design of the Gospel: but seeing the dangers to which the churches were exposed, because of the false teachers, he changed his mind, and wrote pointedly against those false doctrines; exhorting them strenuously to contend for the faith

Verse 4. For there are certain men crept in unawares] Παρεισεδυσαν, they have got into the church under specious pretences; and when in, began to sow their bad seed.

Before of old ordained] Οι παλαι προγεγραμμενοι, such as were long ago proscribed, and condemned in the most public manner; this is the import of the word προγραφειν in this place; and there are many examples of this use of it in the Greek writers. See Kypke.

To this condemnation] To a similar punishment to that immediately about to be mentioned.

In the Sacred Writings all such persons, false doctrines, and impure practices, have been most openly proscribed and condemned; and the apostle immediately produces several examples, viz. the disobedient Israelites, the unfaithful angels, and the impure inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrha. This is most obviously the apostle's meaning; and it is as ridiculous as it is absurd, to look into such words for a decree of eternal reprobation, &c. such a doctrine being as far from the apostle's mind, as from that of Him in whose name he wrote.

Turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness] Making the grace and mercy of God a covering for crimes; intimating that men might sin safely, who believe the gospel, because, in that gospel, grace abounds. But perhaps the goodness of God is here meant; for I cannot see how they could believe the gospel in any way who denied the Lord Jesus Christ; unless, which is likely, their denial refers to this, that while they acknowledged Jesus as the promised Messiah, they denied Him to be the only Lord, Sovereign, and Ruler, of the church and of the world. There are many in the present day who hold the same opinion.

The only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.] Μονον Δεσποτην Θεον και Κυριον ημων Ιησουν Χριστον αρνουμενοι. These words may be translated, Denying the only Sovereign God, even our Lord Jesus Christ. But Θεον, GOD, is omitted by ABC. sixteen others, with Erpen's Arabic, the Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, and Vulgate, and by many of the Fathers. It is very likely that it was originally inserted as a gloss, to ascertain to whom the title of τον μονον Δεσποτην, the only Sovereign, belonged; and thus make two Persons, where only One seems to be intended. The passage, I believe, belongs solely to Jesus Christ, and may be read thus: denying the only Sovereign Ruler, even our Lord Jesus Christ. The text is differently arranged in the Complutensian Polyglott, which contains the first edition of the Greek Testament: Και τον μονον Θεον και Δεσποτην, τον Κυριον ημων Ιησουν Χριστον αρνουμενοι· Denying the only true God and Sovereign, our Lord Jesus Christ. This is a very remarkable position of the words, and doubtless existed in some of the MSS. from which these editors copied. The Simonians, Nicolaitans, and Gnostics, denied God to be the Creator of the world; and Simon is said to have proclaimed himself as FATHER to the Samaritans, as SON to the Jews, and as the HOLY GHOST to all other nations. All such, most obviously denied both Father, Son, and Spirit.

Verse 5. I will therefore put you in remembrance] That is, how such persons were proscribed and condemned to bear the punishment due to such crimes.

Though ye once knew this] The word απαξ, here translated once, has greatly puzzled many interpreters. It has two meanings in the Sacred Writings; and, indeed, in the Greek writers also. 1. It signifies once, one time, as opposed to twice, or several times. 2. Altogether, entirely, perfectly, interpreted by Suidas αντι του διολου, ολοσχερως: and of this meaning he produces a proof from Josephus. This appears to be the sense of the word in Heb. vi. 4. τους απαξ φωτισθεντας, those who were FULLY enlightened. Heb. x. 2. απαξ κεκαθαρμενους, THOROUGHLY cleansed. See also ver. 3. of this Epistle. Psa. lxii. 11. απαξ ελαλησεν ο Θεος. God spoke FULLY, completely, on the subject. St. Jude is to be understood as saying, I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye are THOROUGHLY instructed in this.

Afterward destroyed them] Because they neither believed His word, nor were obedient to His commands. This is the first example of what was mentioned ver. 4.

Verse 6. The angels which kept not their first estate] Την ἑαυτων αρχην, their own principality. The words may be understood of their having invaded the office or dignity of some others; or of their having by some means forfeited their own. This is spoken of those generally termed the fallen angels; but from what they fell, or from what cause, or for what crime, we know not. It is generally thought to have been pride; but this is mere conjecture. One thing is certain; the angels who fell must have been in a state of probation, capable of either standing or falling, as Adam was in Paradise. They did not continue faithful, though they knew the law on which they stood; they are therefore produced as the second example.

But left their own habitation] This seems to intimate that they had invaded the office and prerogatives of others, and attempted to seize on their place of residence and felicity.

He hath reserved in everlasting chains] That is, in a state of confinement from which they cannot escape.

Under darkness] Alluding, probably, to those dungeons or dark cells in prisons, where the most flagitious culprits were confined.

The judgment of the great day.] The final judgment, when both angels and men shall receive their eternal doom. See on 2 Peter ii. 4. In Sohar Exod. fol. 8. c. 32. "Rabbi Isaac asked, Suppose God should punish any of His heavenly family, how would He act?—R. Abba answered, He would send them into the flaming river, take away their dominion, and put others in their place." Some suppose that the saints are to occupy the places from which these angels, by transgression fell.

Verse 7. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha] What their sin and punishment were, may be seen in Gen. xix. and the notes there. This is the third example to illustrate what is laid down ver. 4.

Are set forth for an example] Both of what God will do to such transgressors, and of the position laid down in ver. 4. viz. that God has in the most open and positive manner declared, that such and such sinners shall meet with the punishment due to their crimes.

Suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.] Subjected to such a punishment as an endless fire can inflict. Some apply this to the utter subversion of these cities; so that by the action of that fire, which descended from heaven, they were totally and eternally destroyed; for, as to their being rebuilded, that is impossible, seeing the very ground on which they stood is burnt up, and the whole plain is now the immense lake Asphaltites. See my Notes on Gen. xix.

The first sense applies to the inhabitants of those wicked cities; the second to the cities themselves: in either case, the word πυρ αιωνιον signifies an eternally destructive fire; it has no end in the punishment of the wicked Sodomites, &c. it has no end in the destruction of the cities; they were totally burnt up, and never were, and never can be, rebuilt. In either of these senses the word αιων, eternal, has its grammatical and proper meaning.

Verse 8. Likewise also these filthy dreamers] He means to say, that these false teachers and their followers were as unbelieving and disobedient as the Israelites in the Wilderness; as rebellious against the authority of God, as the fallen angels; and as impure and unholy as the Sodomites; and that, consequently, they must expect similar punishment.

Our translators, by rendering ενυπνιαζομενοι filthy dreamers, seem to have understood St. Jude to mean, les pollutions nocturnes et voluntaires de ces hommes impurs; qui se livrent sans scrupule à toutes sortes des pensées; et salissant leur imagination par la vûe de toutes sortes d'objets, tombent ensuite dans les corruptions honteuses et criminelles. See Calmet. In plain English, self-pollution, with all its train of curses, and cursed effects, on body, soul, and spirit. The idea of our translators seems to be confirmed by the words σαρκα μεν μιαινουσι, they indeed pollute the flesh.—See what is said at the conclusion of the xxxviiith chapter of Genesis.

Despise dominion] Κυριοτητα δε αθετουσι, they set all government at nought; they will come under no restraints; they despise all law; and wish to live as they list.

Speak evil of dignities] Δοξας δε βλασφημουσιν, they blaspheme or speak injuriously of supreme authority.—See 2 Pet. ii. 10, 11. They treat governors and government with contempt; and calumniate and misrepresent all Divine and civil institutions.

Verse 9. Yet Michael the archangel] Of this personage many things are spoken in the Jewish writings. "Rabbi Judah Hakkodesh says, Wherever Michael is said to appear, the glory of the Divine Majesty is always to be understood." Shemoth Rabba, sec. ii. fol. 104. 3. So that it seems as if they considered Michael in some sort as those do Christ, who hold the eternal Sonship of His Divine nature.

Let it be observed, that the word archangel is never found in the plural number in the Sacred Writings. There can be, properly, only one archangel; one chief or head of all the angelic host. Nor is the word devil, as applied to the great enemy of mankind, ever found in the plural: there can be but one monarch of all fallen spirits. Michael is this archangel, and head of all the angelic orders: the devil, great dragon, or Satan, is head of all the diabolic orders. When these two hosts are opposed to each other, they are said to act under these two chiefs, as leaders: hence in Rev. xii. 7. it is said, MICHAEL and his angels fought against the DRAGON and his angels. The word Michael, מיכאל, seems to be compounded of מי mi who, כ ce like, and אל El God; he who is like God: hence by this personage, in the Apocalypse, many understand the Lord Jesus.

Disputed about the body of Moses] What this means I cannot tell; or from what source St. Jude drew it, unless from some tradition among his countrymen. There is something very like it, in Debarim Rabba, sec. ii. fol. 263. 1. "Samael, that wicked one, the prince of the Satans, carefully kept the soul of Moses, saying, When the time comes in which Michael shall lament, I shall have my mouth filled with laughter. Michael said to him, Wretch, I weep, and thou laughest. Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy, because I have fallen; for I shall rise again: when I sit in darkness, the Lord is my light, Mic. vii. 8. By the words, because I have fallen, we must understand the death of Moses: by the words, I shall rise again, the government of Joshua, &c."—See the Preface.

Another contention of Michael with Satan is mentioned in Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 43. 3. "At the time in which Isaac was bound, there was a contention between Michael and Satan. Michael brought a ram, that Isaac might be liberated; but Satan endeavoured to carry off the ram, that Isaac might be slain."

The contention mentioned by Jude is not about the sacrifice of Isaac, nor the soul of Moses; but about the BODY of Moses: but why, or wherefore, we know not. Some think the devil wished to show the Israelites where Moses was buried; knowing that they would then adore his body; and that Michael was sent to resist this discovery.

Durst not bring against him a railing accusation] It was a Jewish maxim, as may be seen in Synopsis Sohar, pag. 92. note 6. "It is not lawful for man to prefer ignominious reproaches, even against wicked spirits."—See Schoettgen.

Dr. Macknight says, "In Dan. x. 13, 21. xii. 1. Michael is spoken of as one of the chief angels who took care of the Israelites as a nation: he may, therefore, have been the angel of the Lord, before whom Joshua the high priest is said, Zech. iii. 1. to have stood, Satan being at his right hand to resist him; namely, in his design of restoring the Jewish church and state, called by Jude, the body of Moses, just as the Christian church is called by Paul the body of Christ. Zechariah adds, And the Lord, that is, the angel of the Lord, as is plain from ver. 1. said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan! even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem, rebuke thee!" This is the most likely interpretation which I have seen: and it will appear the more probable when it is considered, that among the Hebrews גוף guph, BODY, is often used for a thing itself: so in Rom. vii. 24. σωμα της αμαρτιας, the body of sin, signifies sin itself: so the body of Moses, גוף של משה guph shel Mosheh, may signify Moses himself; or that in which he was particularly concerned, viz. his institutes, religion, &c.

It may be added, that the Jews consider Michael and Samael, one as the friend, the other as the enemy, of Israel. Samael is their accuser, Michael their advocate. "Michael and Samael stand before the Lord; Satan accuses, but Michael shows the merits of Israel. Satan endeavours to speak, but Michael silences him: Hold thy tongue, says he, and let us hear what the Judge determines; for it is written, He will speak peace to his people, and to his saints, Psa. lxxxv. 9."—Shemoth Rabba, sec. 18. fol. 117. 3.

sons and their property. This is true in most insurrections and seditions.

But what they know naturally] They are destitute of reflection; their minds are uncultivated: they follow mere natural instinct, and are slaves to their animal propensities.

As brute beasts] Ως τα αλογα ζωα, like the irrational animals; but, in the indulgence of their animal propensities, they corrupt themselves, beyond the example of the brute beasts. A fearful description; and true of many in the present day.

Verse 11. They have gone in the way of Cain] They are haters of their brethren, and they that are such are murderers; and by their false doctrine they corrupt and destroy the souls of the people.

The error of Balaam] For the sake of gain they corrupt the word of God, and refine away its meaning, and let it down so as to suit the passions of the profligate. This was literally true of the Nicolaitans, who taught most impure doctrines, and followed the most lascivious practices.

Gainsaying of Core.] See the account of the rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, and their company, in Numb. xxii. It appears that these persons opposed the authority of the apostles of our Lord, as Korah and his associates did that of Moses and Aaron: and St. Jude predicts them a similar punishment. In this verse he accuses them of murder, covetousness, and rebellion against the authority of God.

Verse 12. Spots in your feasts of charity] It appears that these persons, unholy and impure as they were, still continued to have outward fellowship with the church! This is strange: but it is very likely that their power and influence in that place had swallowed up, or set aside, the power and authority of the real ministers of Christ: a very common case, when worldly time-serving men get into the church.

The feasts of charity; the αγαπαι, or love-feasts, of which the apostle speaks, were in use in the primitive church till the middle of the fourth century, when, by the Council of Laodicea, they were prohibited to be held in the churches; and, having been abused, fell into disuse. In later days they have been revived, in all the purity and simplicity of the primitive institution, among the Moravians, or Unitas Fratrum, and the people called Methodists.

Among the ancients, the richer members of the church made an occasional general feast, at which all the members attended; and the poor and the rich ate together. The fatherless, the widows, and the strangers, were invited to these feasts: and their eating together was a proof of their love to each other; whence such entertainments were called love-feasts. The love-feasts were, at first, celebrated before the Lord's Supper: in process of time they appear to have been celebrated after it. But they were never considered as the Lord's Supper, nor any substitute for it.—See, for farther information, Suicer in his Thesaurus, under the word Αγαπη.

Feeding themselves without fear] Eating, not to suffice nature, but to pamper appetite. It seems the provision was abundant; and they ate to gluttony and riot. It was this which brought the love-feasts into disrepute in the church; and was the means of their being at last wholly laid aside. This abuse is never likely to take place among the Methodists, as they only use bread and water; and of this the provision is not sufficient to afford the tenth part of a meal.

Instead of αγαπαις, love-feasts, απαταις, deceits, is the reading of the Codex Alexandrinus, and the Codex Ephrem, two MSS. of the highest antiquity; as also of those MSS. collated by Laurentius Valla, and of some of those in the Medicean library. This reading appears to have been introduced in order to avoid the conclusion that some might be led to draw concerning the state of the church: it must be very corrupt, to have in its communion such corrupt men.

Clouds—without water] The doctrine of God is compared to the rain, Deut. xxxii. 2. and clouds are the instruments by which the rain is distilled upon the earth. In arid or parched countries the very appearance of a cloud is delightful, because it is a token of refreshing showers: but when sudden winds arise, and disperse these clouds, the hope of the husbandman and shepherd is cut off. These false teachers are represented as clouds; they have the form and office of the teachers of righteousness, and from such appearances pure doctrine may be naturally expected. But these are clouds without water: they distil no refreshing showers, because they have none; they are carried away, and about, by their passions, as those light fleecy clouds are carried by the winds.—See the Notes on 2 Pet. ii. 17.

Trees whose fruit withereth] Δενδρα φθινοπωρινα, galled or diseased trees; for φθινοπωρον is, according to Phavorinus, νοσος φθινουσα οπωρας, a disease, (in trees) which causes their fruit to wither: for, although there are blossoms, and the fruit shapes, or is set, the galls in the trees prevent the proper circulation of the sap; and, therefore, the fruit never comes to perfection. Hence the apostle immediately adds, without fruit; i. e. the fruit never comes to maturity. This metaphor expresses the same thing as the preceding. They have the appearance of ministers of the gospel, but they have no fruit.

Twice dead] First, naturally and practically dead in sin, from which they had been revived by the preaching and grace of the gospel. Secondly, dead by backsliding or apostacy from the true faith, by which they lost the grace they had before received: and now, likely to continue in that death, because plucked up from the roots, their roots of faith and love being no longer fixed in Christ Jesus. Perhaps the aorist is taken here for the future: they SHALL BE plucked up from the roots; God will exterminate them from the earth.

Verse 13. Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame] The same metaphor as in Isa. lvii. 20. The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. These are like the sea in a storm, where the swells are like mountains, the breakers lash the shore, and sound like thunder: and the great deep, stirred up from its very bottom, rolls its muddy putrid sediment, and deposits it upon the beach. Such were those proud and arrogant boasters, those headstrong, unruly, and ferocious men, who swept into their own vortex the souls of the simple, and left nothing behind them that was not indicative of their folly, their turbulence, and their impurity.

Wandering stars] Αστερες πλανηται, not what we call planets; for, although these differ from what are called the fixed stars, which never change their place, while the planets have their revolution round the sun; yet, properly speaking, there is no irregularity in their motions; for their appearance of advancing, stationary, and retrograde, are only in reference to an observer on the earth, viewing them in different parts of their orbits; for, as to themselves, they ever continue a steady course through all their revolutions. But these are uncertain anomalous meteors, ignes fatui, wills-o'-the-wisp; dancing about in the darkness which themselves have formed, and leading simple souls astray; who have ceased to walk in the light, and have no other guides but those oscillating and devious meteors, which, if you run after them, will flee before you; and if you run from them, will follow you.

The blackness of darkness] They are such as are going headlong into that outer darkness where there is wailing, and weeping, and gnashing of teeth. The whole of this description appears to have been borrowed from 2 Pet. ii. where the Reader is requested to see the Notes.

Verse 14. Enoch also, the seventh from Adam] He was the seventh patriarch; and is distinguished thus from Enoch, son of Cain, who was but the third from Adam: this appears plainly from the genealogy, 1 Chron. i. 1. Adam, Seth, Enos, Kenan, Mahalaleel, Jared, Henoch, or Enoch, &c. Of the book of Enoch, from which this prophecy is thought to have been taken, much has been said; but as the work is apocryphal, and of no authority, I shall not burthen my page with extracts.—See the Preface.

Perhaps the word προεφητευσε, prophesied, means no more than preached, spoke, made declarations, &c. concerning these things and persons; for, doubtless, he reproved the ungodliness of his own times. It is certain that a book of Enoch was known in the earliest ages of the primitive church, and is quoted by Origen and Tertullian; and is mentioned by St. Jerom in the Apostolical Constitutions, by Nicephorus, Athanasius, and probably by St. Augustin.—See Suicer's Thesaurus, Vol. I. col. 1131. Such a work is still extant among the Abyssinians.

Ten thousand of his saints] This seems to be taken from Dan. vii. 10.

Verse 15. To execute judgment] This was originally spoken to the antediluvians; and the coming of the Lord to destroy that world was the thing spoken of in this prophecy, or declaration. But as God had threatened this, it required no direct inspiration to foretell it. To execute judgment, &c. This is a very strange verse as to its composition, and is loaded with various readings; the MSS. and Versions being at little agreement among themselves, on its phraseology. Αυτων, which we translate among them, is omitted by the best MSS. and Versions; and is, in all probability, spurious. Many also omit ασεβειας, after εργων, ungodly deeds. Many insert λογων, words or speeches, after σκληρων, hard; and this word our translators have supplied. And instead of sinners, αμαρτωλοι, the Sahidic has ανθρωποι, men. There are others of less note; but the frequent recurrence of ALL and UNGODLY makes the construction of the sentence very harsh.

Dr. Macknight supposes that Enoch's prophecy was common among the Jews; for the first words in Hebrew are Maranatha, and these were used by them in that form of excommunication, or cursing, which they pronounced against irreclaimable offenders. The doctor forgets himself here: the words Maranatha are not Hebrew, but Syriac. In Hebrew, the form of execration begins with ארור אתה arur attah, "cursed art thou;" or, מחרם אתה mecherem attah: but the Syriac ܡܪܢ ܐܬܐ maran atha, is literally our Lord is coming; see on 1 Cor. xvi. 22. but here, in the Syriac, the words are ܐܬܐ ܡܘܪܝܐ atha moria, "the Lord cometh." So it is doubtful whether this fancied analogy exists.

Verse 16. These are murmurers] Grudging and grumbling at all men, and at all things. Complainers, μεμψιμοιροι, complainers of their fate or destiny; finding fault with God and all His providential dispensations; making and governing worlds in their own way: persons whom neither God nor man can please.

Walking after their own lusts] Taking their wild, disorderly, and impure passions for the rule of their conduct, and not the writings of the prophets and apostles.

Great swelling words] Υπερογκα: see the explanation of this term in 2 Pet. ii. 18.

Having men's persons in admiration] Timeservers and flatterers; persons who pretend to be astonished at the greatness, goodness, sagacity, learning, wisdom, &c. of rich and great men: hoping thereby to acquire money, influence, power, friends, and the like.

Because of advantage] Οφελειας χαριν, for the sake of lucre. All the flatterers of the rich are of this kind; and especially those who profess to be ministers of the gospel, and who, for the sake of a more advantageous settlement, or living, will sooth the rich even in their sins. With such persons, a rich man is every thing; and if he have but a grain of grace, his piety is extolled to the skies! I have known several ministers of this character, and wish them all to read the sixteenth verse of Jude.

Verse 17. Remember—the words] Instead of following those teachers, and their corrupt doctrine, remember what Christ and His apostles have said; for they foretold the coming of such false teachers and impostors.

Verse 18. Mockers in the last time] See the Notes on 1 Tim. iv. 1. 2 Tim. iii. 1, &c. and particularly 2 Peter iii. 2, 3, &c. to which Jude seems to refer.

The last time] The conclusion of the Jewish polity.

Verse 19. Who separate themselves] From the true church; which they leave from an affectation of superior wisdom.

Sensual] Ψυχικοι, animal; living as brute beasts, guided simply by their own lusts and passions; their Bible being the manifold devices and covetousness of their own hearts: for they have not the Spirit, they are not spiritually-minded, and have no Holy Ghost; no inspiration from God.

Verse 20. Building up yourselves] Have the most holy faith, the gospel of our Lord Jesus, and the writings of His apostles, for your foundation. Found all your expectations on these: and seek from the Christ, who is their sum and substance, all the grace and glory ye need.

Praying in the Holy Ghost] Holding fast the Divine influence which ye have received; and under that influence making prayer and supplication to God. The prayer that is not sent up through the influence of the Holy Ghost, is never likely to reach heaven.

Verse 21. Keep yourselves in the love of God] By building up yourselves on your most holy faith, and praying in the Holy Ghost; for, without this, we shall soon lose the love of God.

Looking for the mercy of our Lord] For, although they were to build themselves up, and to pray in the Holy Ghost, and keep themselves in the love of God; yet this building, praying, and keeping, cannot merit heaven; for, after all their diligence, earnestness, self-denial, watching, obedience, &c. they must look for the MERCY of the Lord Jesus Christ, to bring them to ETERNAL LIFE.

Verse 22. And of some have compassion, making a difference] The general meaning of this exhortation is supposed to be—"Ye are not to deal alike with all those who have been seduced by false teachers; ye are to make a difference between those who have been led away by weakness and imprudence; and those who in the pride and arrogance of their hearts, and their unwillingness to submit to wholesome discipline, have separated themselves from the church, and become its inveterate enemies."

Instead of και ους μεν ελεειτε διακρινομενοι and of some have compassion, making a difference, many MSS. Versions, and Fathers, have και ους μεν ελεγχετε διακρινομενους, and some rebuke after having judged them; or, rebuke those that differ; or, some that are wavering, convince; or whatever else the Reader pleases: for this and the following verse are all confusion, both in the MSS. and Versions; and it is extremely difficult to know what was the original text. Our own is as likely as any.

Verse 23. And others save with fear] "Some of them snatch from the fire; but when they repent, have mercy upon them in fear."—Syriac. 'And some of them rebuke for their sins; and on others have mercy when they are convicted; and others save from the fire, and deliver them."—Erpen's Arabic. Mr. Wesley's Note has probably hit the sense. "Meantime watch over others as well as yourselves; and give them such help as their various needs require. For instance—1. Some that are wavering in judgment, staggered by others, or by their own evil reasoning, endeavour more deeply to convince of the truth as it is in Jesus. 2. Some snatch with a swift and strong hand out of the fire of sin and temptation. 3. On others show compassion, in a milder and gentler way; though still with a jealous fear, lest you yourselves be infected with the disease you endeavour to cure. See, therefore, that while ye love the sinners, ye retain the utmost abhorrence of their sins; and of any the least degree of or approach to them."

Hating even the garment spotted by the flesh] Fleeing from all appearance of evil. Dictum sumptum, ut apparet, à mulieribus sanguine menstruo pollutis, quarum vestes etiam pollutæ censebantur: or, there may be an allusion to a case of leprosy, for that infected the garments of the afflicted person; and these garments were capable of conveying the contagion to others.

Verse 24. Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling] Who alone can preserve you from the contagion of sin, and preserve you from falling into any kind of error that might be prejudicial to the interest of your souls; and thus to present you faultless; or, as many others read, αστιλους, without spot, alluding to the spotted garment mentioned above;

Before the presence of his glory] Where nothing can stand that does not resemble Himself; with exceeding great joy, in finding yourselves eternally out of the reach of the possibility of falling; and for having now arrived at an eternity of happiness.

Verse 25. To the only wise God] Who alone can teach, who alone has declared the truth; that truth in which ye now stand.—See on Rom. xvi. 27.

Our Saviour] Who has, by His blood, washed us from our sins, and made us kings and priests unto God the Father.

Be glory] Be ascribed all light, excellence, and splendour.

Majesty] All power, authority, and pre-eminence.

Dominion] All rule and government in the world, and in the church, in earth and in heaven.

And power] All energy and operation to every thing that is wise, great, good, holy, and excellent.

Both now] In the present state of life and things:—

And ever.] Εις παντας τους αιωνας; to the end of all states, places, dispensations, and worlds; and to a state which knows no termination, being that ETERNITY in which this glory, majesty, dominion, and power, ineffably and incomprehensibly dwell.

Amen] So let it be, so ought it to be, and so it shall be.

After, To the only wise God our Saviour, many excellent MSS. Versions, &c. add διὰ Ἰησου Χριστου του Κυριου ημων, by Jesus Christ our Lord. And after dominion and power, they add προ παντος του αιωνος, before all time: and both these readings Griesbach has received into the text. The text, therefore, may be read thus—To the only wise God our Saviour, by Christ Jesus our Lord, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, before all time; and now, and through all futurity.—Amen. Let the whole creation form in one chorus, issuing in one eternal Amen!

Of how little authority such Subscriptions are we have already had occasion to observe in various cases. Very few of them are ancient; and none of them coeval with the works to which they are appended. They are, in general, the opinions of the scribes who wrote the copies; or of the churches for whose use they were written. No stress, therefore, should be laid on them, as if proceeding from Divine authority.

With the Epistle of Jude end all the apostolical Epistles, and with it the canon of the New Testament, as to gospels and epistles; for the Apocalypse is a work, sui generis, and can rank with neither. It is, in general, a collection of symbolic prophecies, which do not appear to be yet fully understood by the Christian world, and which can only be known when they are fulfilled.

THE END OF THE NOTES TO THE GENERAL EPISTLE OF JUDE.

INTRODUCTION

TO

ST. JOHN,

THE DIVINE.

AS there has been much controversy concerning the authenticity of this Book; and as it was rejected by many for a considerable time; and, when generally acknowledged, was received cautiously by the Church; it will be well to examine the testimony by which its authenticity is supported, and the arguments by which its claim to a place in the Sacred Canon is vindicated. Before, therefore, I produce my own sentiments, I shall beg leave to lay before the Reader those of Dr. Lardner, who has treated the subject with much judgment.

"We are now come to the last Book of the New Testament, the Revelation; about which there have been different sentiments among Christians; many receiving it as the writing of John the Apostle and Evangelist, others ascribing it to John a presbyter, others to Cerinthus, and some rejecting it, without knowing to whom it should be ascribed. I shall therefore here rehearse the testimony of ancient Christians, as it arises in several ages.

"It is probable that Hermas read the Book of the Revelation, and imitated it; he has many things resembling it. It is referred to by the Martyrs at Lyons. There is reason to think it was received by Papias. Justin Martyr, about the year 140, was acquainted with this Book, and received it as written by the apostle John; for, in his dialogue with Trypho, he expressly says, 'A man from among us, by name John, one of the apostles of Christ, in the revelation made to him, has prophesied that the believers in our Christ shall live a thousand years in Jerusalem; and after that shall be the general, and, in a word, the eternal resurrection and judgment of all together.' To this passage we suppose Eusebius to refer, in his ecclesiastical history, when, giving an account of Justin's works, he observes to this purpose. He also mentions the Revelation of John, expressly calling it the apostle's. Among the works of Melito, bishop of Sardis, one of the seven churches of Asia, about the year 177, Eusebius mentions one, intituled, 'Of the Revelation of John.' It is very probable that Melito ascribed this Book to the apostle of that name, and esteemed it of canonical authority. Irenæus, bishop of Lyons in Gaul, about A. D. 178, who in his younger days was acquainted with Polycarp, often quotes this book as the Revelation of John, the apostle of the Lord. And in one place he says, 'It was seen not long ago, but almost in our age, at the end of the reign of Domitian.'

"Theophilus was bishop of Antioch about 181. Eusebius, speaking of a work of his against the heresy of Hermogenes, says, 'He therein made use of testimonies, or quoted passages, from John's Apocalypse.' The book of the Revelation is several times quoted by Clement of Alexandria, who flourished about 194; and once in this manner, 'Such an one, though here on earth he is not honoured with the first seat, shall sit upon the four-and-twenty thrones judging the people, as John says in the Revelation.' Tertullian, about the year 200, often quotes the Revelation, and supposes it to have been written by St. John, the same who wrote the First Epistle of John, universally received. Again, the apostle John describes, in the Apocalypse, A sharp two-edged sword coming out of the mouth of God. He also says, 'We have Churches that are the disciples of John. For though Marcion rejects the Revelation, the succession of bishops, traced to the original, will assure us that John is the author:' by John, undoubtedly meaning the apostle.

"From Eusebius we learn, that Apollonius, who wrote against the Montanists about 211, quoted the Revelation. By Caius, about 212, it was ascribed to Cerinthus: it was received by Hippolytus about 220, and by Origen about 230. It is often quoted by him. He seems not to have had any doubt about its genuineness. In his Commentary upon St. John's Gospel, he speaks of it in this manner: 'Therefore John, the son of Zebedee, says in the Revelation.' Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria, about 247, or somewhat later, wrote a book against the Millenarians, in which he allows the Revelation to be written by John, a holy and divinely inspired man. But he says, 'He cannot easily grant him to be the apostle, the son of Zebedee, whose is the Gospel according to John, and the Catholic Epistle.' He rather thinks it may be the work of John an Elder, who also lived at Ephesus in Asia, as well as the apostle. It also appears, from a conference which Dionysius had with some Millenarians, that the Revelation was about 240, and before, received by Nepos, an Egyptian bishop, and by many others in that country; and that it was in great reputation. It was received by Cyprian, bishop of Carthage, about 248, and by the Church of Rome in his time, and by many Latin authors. The Revelation was received by Novatus and his followers, and by various other authors. It is also probable that it was received by the Manichees. It was received by Lactantius, and by the Donatists; by the latter Arnobius about 460, and by the Arians.

"In the time of Eusebius, in the former part of the fourth century, it was by some not received at all; and therefore it is reckoned by him among contradicted books. Nevertheless it was generally received. Eusebius himself seems to have hesitated about it; for he says, 'It is likely the Revelation was seen by John the Elder, if not by John the Apostle.' It may be reckoned probable, that the critical argument of Dionysius of Alexandria was of great weight with him, and others of that time. The Revelation was received by Athanasius, and Epiphanius; but we also learn from him, that it was not received by all in his time. It is not in the catalogue of Cyril of Jerusalem, and seems not to have been received by him. It is also wanting in the Catalogue of the Council of Laodicea, about 363.

"The Revelation is not in Gregory Nazianzen's Catalogue; however it seems to have been received by him. It is in the Catalogue of Amphilochius; but he says, it was not received by all. It is also omitted in Ebedjesus's Catalogue of the books of Scripture received by the Syrians; nor is it in the ancient Syriac Version.

"It was received by Jerom; but he says, it was rejected by the Greek Christians. It was received by Rufin, by the Third Council of Carthage, and by Augustine; but it was not received by all in his time. It is never quoted by Chrysostom, and probably was not received by him. It is in the Catalogue of Dionysius called the Areopagite, about 490. It is in the Alexandrian MS. It was received by Sulpicius Severus about 401; and by J. Damascenus, and by Œcumenius, and by many other authors. Andrew, bishop of Cæsarea, in Cappadocia, at the end of the fifth century, and Arethas, bishop of the same place, in the sixth century, wrote commentaries upon it. But it was not received by Severian, bishop of Gabala; nor, as it seems, by Theodoret. Upon the whole, it appears that this book has been generally received in all ages, though some have doubted of it, and rejected it; particularly the Syrians, and some other Christians in the East.

"Having thus represented the external evidence of the genuineness of the Book of the Revelation, or of its being written by St. John, I should proceed to consider the internal evidence. But I need not enlarge here, but merely take notice of a few things of principal note, which learned men insist upon as arguments, that the Revelation has the same author with the gospel and epistles that go under the name of the evangelist and apostle John. Chap. i. ver. 1. The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servant things which must shortly come to pass. And he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John.

"Hence it is argued, that John styles himself the servant of Christ, in a sense not common to all believers, but peculiarly to those who are especially employed by Him. So Paul, and other apostles, call themselves servants of God and of Christ. Particularly Rom. i. 1. Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ. James i. 1. James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ. 2 Peter i. 1. Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ. Jude 1. Jude, a servant of Jesus Christ. So Moses is called the servant of God, Numb. xii. 7. and Heb. iii. 2. and in like manner, many of the prophets. And in this very Book, chap. x. 7. is the expression, as he has declared unto his servants, the prophets.

"This observation may be of some weight for showing that the writer is an apostle; but it is not decisive: and in the same verse, whence this argument is taken, the phrase is used in its general sense; Which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants. Ver. 2. Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw.

"Some suppose the writer here refers to the written Gospel of St. John; and should be understood to say, that he had already borne testimony concerning the word of God, and of Jesus Christ. But these words may be understood of this very book, the Revelation, and the things contained in it. The writer says here, very properly at the beginning, and by way of preface, that he had performed his office in this Book, having faithfully recorded in it the word of God, which he had received from Jesus Christ. Certainly, if these words did clearly refer to a written gospel, they would be decisive; but they are allowed to be ambiguous, and other senses have been given of them. By some they have been understood to contain a declaration that the writer had already borne witness to Jesus Christ before magistrates. Moreover, I think, that if St. John had intended to manifest himself in this introduction, he would more plainly have characterized himself in several parts of this Book than he has done. This observation, therefore, appears to me to be of small moment for determining who the writer is.

"Farther, it is argued in favour of the genuineness of this Book, that 'there are in it many instances of conformity, both of sentiment and expression, between the Revelation and the uncontested writings of St. John.' Our Saviour says to His disciples, John xvi. 33. Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. Christian firmness under trials is several times represented by overcoming, overcoming the world, or overcoming the wicked one, in St. John's First Epistle, chap. ii. 13, 14. iv. 4. v. 4, 5. And it is language peculiar to St. John, being in no other books of the New Testament. And our Lord says, Rev. iii. 21. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne; even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne, Comp. chap. ii. 7, 11, 17, 26. iii. 5, 12, 21. and xxi. 7.

"Concerning the time of writing this Book, I need not now say much. It is the general testimony of ancient authors, that St. John was banished into Patmos in the time of Domitian, in the latter part of his reign, and restored by his successor Nerva. But the Book could not be published till after John's release and return to Ephesus in Asia. As Domitian died in 96, and his persecution did not commence till near the end of his reign, the Revelation seems to be fitly dated in the year 95 or 96. Mill places the Revelation in the year of Christ 96, and the last year of the Emperor Domitian. At first he supposed that the Revelation was written at Patmos; but afterward he altered his mind, and thought it was not written till after his return to Ephesus. He builds his opinion upon the words of Revelation i. 9. If so, I apprehend it might not be published before the year 97; or, at the soonest, near the end of 96. Basnage places the Revelation in 96. Le Clerc, likewise, who readily admits the genuineness of this Book, speaks of it in the same year. Mr. Lowman supposes St. John to have had his visions in the isle of Patmos, in 95; but Mr. Wetstein favours the opinion of those who have argued that the Revelation was written before the Jewish war. He also says, that if the Revelation was written before that war, it is likely that the events of that time should be foretold in it: to which I answer, that though some interpreters have applied some things in this Book to those times, I cannot say whether they have done it rightly or not, because I do not understand the Revelation. But, to me, it seems that though this Book was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, there was no necessity that it should be foretold here; because our blessed Lord had, in His own preaching, frequently spoken very plainly and intelligibly concerning the calamities coming upon the Jewish people in general, and the city and temple of Jerusalem in particular; and His plain predictions, and symbolical prefigurations of those events, were recorded by no less than three historians and evangelists, before the war in Judea broke out.

"Grotius, who places this book in the reign of Claudius, was of opinion that the visions of this Book were seen at different times, and afterward joined together in one book, in the same way as the visions and prophecies of some of the prophets of the Old Testament.

"Concerning this opinion it is not proper for me to dispute; though there appears not any foundation for it in the Book itself, as Vitringa has observed. But that the Book of the Revelation in its present form, sent as an Epistle to the seven churches of Asia, ch. i. ver. 4. was not composed and published before the reign of Domitian, appears to me very probable, from the general and almost universally concurring testimony of the ancients, and from some things in the Book itself.

"I shall now transcribe a part of L'Enfant's and Beausobre's Preface to the Revelation, at the same time referring to Vitringa, who has many like thoughts:

"Having quoted Irenæus, Origen, Eusebius, and various other writers, placing St. John's banishment at Patmos in the latter part of the reign of Domitian, and saying, that he there saw the Revelation, they say, 'To these incontestable witnesses it is needless to add a long list of others of all ages, and of the same sentiment, to whom the authority of Epiphanius is by no means comparable.' And they go on: 'We must add to so constant a tradition other reasons which farther show, that the Revelation was not written till after Claudius and Nero. It appears from the Book itself, that there had been already churches for a considerable space of time in Asia: forasmuch as St. John, in the name of Christ, reproves faults, that happen not but after a while. The church of Ephesus had left her first love. That of Sardis had a name to live, but was dead. The church of Laodicea was fallen into lukewarmness and indifference. But the church of Ephesus, for instance, was not founded by St. Paul before the last years of Claudius. When, in 61 or 62, St. Paul wrote to them from Rome, instead of reproving their want of love, he commends their love and faith, ch. i. 15. It appears from the Revelation, that the Nicolaitans made a sect, when this Book was written, since they are expressly named; whereas they were only foretold, and described in general terms by St. Peter, in his Second Epistle, written after the year 60, and in St. Jude, about the time of the destruction of Jerusalem by Vespasian. It is evident from many places of the Revelation, that there had been an open persecution in the provinces; St. John himself had been banished to the Isle of Patmos for the testimony of Jesus. The church of Ephesus, or its bishops, is commended for their labour and patience, which seems to imply persecution. This is still more clear in the words directed to the church of Smyrna, ch. ii. 9. I know thy works and tribulation. For the original word always denotes persecution, in the Scriptures of the New Testament; as it is also explained in the following verse. In the thirteenth verse of the same chapter, mention is made of a martyr named Antipas, put to death at Pergamus. Though ancient ecclesiastical history gives us no information concerning this Antipas, it is nevertheless certain, that, according to all the rules of language, what is here said must be understood literally. All that has been now observed concerning the persecution, of which mention is made in the first chapters of the Revelation, cannot relate to the time of Claudius, who did not persecute the Christians, nor to the time of Nero, whose persecution did not reach the provinces; and, therefore, it must relate to Domitian, according to ecclesiastical tradition.

"The visions, therefore, here recorded, and the publication of them in this Book, must be assigned, as far as I can see, to the years of Christ 95, and 96, or 97."

The reasoning of Dr. Lardner, relative to the date of this Book, is by no means satisfactory to many other critics; who consider it to have been written before the destruction of Jerusalem; and in this opinion they are supported by the most respectable testimonies among the ancients, though the contrary was the more general opinion. Epiphanius says, that John was banished to Patmos by Claudius Cæsar: this would bring back the date to about A. D. 50. Andreas, (bishop of Cæsarea, in Cappadocia, about A. D. 500,) in his Comment on this Book, ch. vi. ver. 16. says, John received this Revelation under the reign of Vespasian. This date also might place it before the final overthrow of the Jewish state; though Vespasian reigned to A. D. 79. The Inscription to this Book, in the Syriac Version, first published by De Dieu, in 1627, and afterward in the London Polyglott, is the following:—"The Revelation which God made to John the Evangelist, in the island of Patmos, to which he was banished by Nero Cæsar." This places it before the year of our Lord 69, and consequently before the destruction of Jerusalem. Of this opinion are many eminent writers, and among them Hentenius, Harduin, Grotius, Lightfoot, Hammond, Sir Isaac Newton, Bishop Newton, Wetstein, and others.

If the date could be settled, it would be of the utmost consequence to the right interpretation of the Book; but, amidst so many conflicting opinions, this is almost hopeless.

Dr. Lardner has given several proofs, from internal evidence, that the Revelation is the work of St. John; as there are found in it the same forms of expression which are found in his Gospel and Epistles; and which are peculiar to this apostle. Wetstein gives a collection, which the reader may examine at his leisure. E. g. compare

Rev. i. 1.	with John xii. 33. xviii. 37. xxi. 19.	Rev. iii. 10.	with John xii. 27.
5.	1 John i. 7.	21.	1 John ii. 13, 14. iv. 4. v. 5.

9.	John xi. 27.

Dr. Lardner has considered several of these, with the addition of other resemblances, in his account of Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria, in A. D. 247. in the Third Volume of his WORKS, pag. 121—126. This mode of proof, as it applies to most of the above references, is not entirely satisfactory.

Dionysius argues, that the style of the Revelation is totally different from that of John in his acknowledged writings; and it seems strange to me that this should be contested by any man of learning. Nothing more simple and unadorned than the narrative of St. John in his GOSPEL; nothing more plain and natural than his EPISTLES: but the REVELATION, on the contrary, is figurative, rhetorical, laboured, and elevated, to the highest degree. All that can be said here on this subject is, that if the Spirit of God choose to inspire the words and style, as well as the matter, of His communications, He may choose what variety He pleases; and speak at different times, and in divers manners, to the same person. This, however, is not His usual way.

For other matters relative to this subject I must refer to the following Preface, and to the Writers quoted above.

PREFACE

ST. JOHN,

THE DIVINE.

AMONG the Interpreters of the Apocalypse, both in ancient and modern times, we find a vast diversity of opinions; but they may be all reduced to four principal hypotheses, or modes of interpretation:

1. The Apocalypse contains a prophetical description of the destruction of Jerusalem, of the Jewish war, and the civil wars of the Romans.

2. It contains predictions of the persecutions of the Christians under the Heathen emperors of Rome, and of the happy days of the Church under the Christian emperors, from Constantine downwards.

3. It contains prophecies concerning the tyrannical and oppressive conduct of the Roman Pontiffs, the true Antichrist; and foretells the final destruction of Popery.

4. It is a prophetic declaration of the schism and heresies of Martin Luther, those called Reformers, and their successors; and the final destruction of the Protestant religion.

The first opinion has been defended by Professor Wetstein, and other learned men on the continent.

The second is the opinion of the Primitive Fathers in general, both Greek and Latin.

The third was first broached by the Abbé Joachim, who flourished in the thirteenth century, was espoused by most of the Franciscans, and has been, and still is, the general opinion of the Protestants.

The fourth seems to have been invented by Popish writers, merely by way of retaliation; and has been illustrated and defended at large by a Mr. Walmsley (I believe,) titular Dean of Wells, in a work called the History of the Church, under the feigned name of Signior Pastorini.

In this work he endeavours to turn every thing against Luther and the Protestants, which they interpreted of the Pope and Popery; and attempts to show, from a computation of the Apocalyptical numbers, that the total destruction of Protestantism in the world will take place in 1825! But this is not the first prophecy that has been invented for the sake of an event, the accomplishment of which was earnestly desired; and as a stimulus to excite general attention, and promote united exertion, when the time of the pretended prophecy was fulfilled.

The full title of the book which I quote, is the following:

"The General History of the Christian Church, from her Birth to her final triumphant state in Heaven, chiefly deduced from the Apocalypse of St. John the Apostle. By Sig. Pastorini.

"Blessed is he that readeth and heareth the words of this prophecy."
Apocalypse, Ch. i. ver. 3.

Printed in the Year MDCC. LXXI." 8vo. No place nor printer's name mentioned.

The place where he foretells the final destruction of Protestantism is in p. 249 and 262.

The Catholic College of Maynooth, in Ireland, have lately published a new edition of this work! in which the author kindly predicts the approaching overthrow of the whole Protestant system, both in church and state; and in the mean time gives them, most condescendingly, Abaddon or the devil for their king!

Who the writer of the Apocalypse was, learned men are not agreed. This was a question, as well in ancient as in modern times. We have already seen that many have attributed it to the apostle John; others to a person called John the presbyter, who they say was an Ephesian, and totally different from John the apostle. And, lastly, some have attributed it to Cerinthus, a contemporary of John the apostle. This hypothesis, however, seems utterly unsupportable; as there is no probability that the Christian church would have so generally received a work which came from the hands of a man, at all times reputed a very dangerous heretic; nor can the doctrines it contains, ever comport with a Cerinthian creed.

Whether it was written by John the apostle, John the presbyter, or some other person, is of little importance, if the question of its inspiration be fully established. If written by an apostle, it is canonical; and should be received, without hesitation, as a work divinely inspired. Every apostle acted under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. John was an apostle, and consequently inspired: therefore, whatever he wrote was written by Divine inspiration. If, therefore, the authenticity of the work be established, i. e. that it was written by John the apostle, all the rest necessarily follow.

As I have scarcely any opinion to give concerning this Book on which I could wish any of my Readers to rely, I shall not enter into any discussion relative to the author, or the meaning of his several visions and prophecies; and for general information refer to Dr. Lardner, Michaelis, and others.

Various attempts have been made by learned men to fix the plan of this work; but even in this few agree. I shall produce some of the chief of these; and first that of Wetstein, which is the most singular of the whole.

He supposes the Book of the Apocalypse to have been written a considerable time before the destruction of Jerusalem. The events described from the fourth chapter to the end he supposes to refer to the Jewish war, and to the civil commotions which took place in Italy while Otho, Vitellius, and Vespasian, were contending for the empire. These contentions and destructive wars occupied the space of about three years and a half, during which Professor Wetstein thinks the principal events took place which are recorded in this Book. On these subjects he speaks particularly in his notes, at the end of which he subjoins what he calls his Ανακεφαλαιωσις, or Synopsis of the whole work, which I proceed now to lay before the Reader.

"This prophecy, which predicts the calamities which God should send on the enemies of the Gospel, is divided into two parts. The first is contained in the closed book; the second in the open book.

I. The first concerns the earth and the third part, i. e. Judea and the Jewish nation.

II. The second concerns many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings, ch. x. 11. i. e. The Roman Empire.

1. The book written within and without, and sealed with seven seals, ch. v. 1. is the bill of divorce sent from God to the Jewish nation.

2. The crowned conqueror on the white horse armed with a bow, ch. vi. 2. is Artabanus, king of the Parthians, who slaughtered multitudes of the Jews in Babylon.

3. The red horse, ver. 4. The Sicarii and robbers in Judea, in the time of the proconsuls Felix and Festus.

4. The black horse, ver. 5. The famine under Claudius.

5. The pale horse, ver. 8. The plague which followed the robberies and the famine.

6. The souls of those who were slain, ver. 9. The Christians in Judea, who were persecuted, and were now about to be avenged.

7. The great earthquake, ver. 12. The commotions which preceded the Jewish rebellion.

8. The servants of God from every tribe, sealed in their foreheads, ch. vii. 3. The Christians taken under the protection of God, and warned by the prophets to flee immediately from the land.

9. The silence for half an hour, ch. viii. 1. The short truce granted at the solicitation of king Agrippa. Then follows the rebellion itself.

1. The trees are burnt, ver. 7. The fields and villages, and unfortified places of Judea, which first felt the bad effects of the sedition.

2. The burning mountain cast into the sea, which in consequence became blood, ver. 8. and,

3. The burning star falling into the rivers, and making the waters bitter, ch. viii. 10, 11. The slaughter of the Jews at Cæsarea and Scythopolis.

4. The eclipsing of the sun, moon, and stars, ver. 12. The anarchy of the Jewish commonwealth.

5. The locusts like scorpions hurting men, ch. ix. 3. The expedition of Cestius Gallus, Prefect of Syria.

6. The army with arms of divers colours, ver. 16, 17. The armies under Vespasian in Judea. About this time Nero and Galba died; after which followed the civil war, signified by the sounding of the seventh trumpet, ch. x. 7, 11. xi. 15.

1. The two prophetic witnesses, two olive-trees, two candlesticks, ch. xi. 3, 4. Teachers in the church, predicting the destruction of the Jewish temple and commonwealth.

2. The death of the witnesses, ver. 7. Their flight, and the flight of the Church of Jerusalem, to Pella, in Arabia.

3. The resurrection of the witnesses, after three days and a half, ver. 11. The predictions began to be fulfilled at a time in which their accomplishment was deemed impossible; and the doctrine of Christ begins to prevail over Judea, and over the whole earth.

4. The tenth part of the city fell in the same hour, and seven thousand names of men slain, ver. 13. Jerusalem seized by the Idumeans; and many of the priests and nobles, with Annas, the high-priest, signified by names of men, i. e. men of name, slain by the zealots.

5. The woman clothed with the sun; the moon under her feet, and a crown of twelve stars on her head, ch. xii. 1. The Christian church.

6. The great red dragon seen in heaven, with seven heads, seven diadems, and ten horns, ver. 6. The six first Cæsars, who were all made princes at Rome, governing the armies and the Roman people with great authority; especially Nero, the last of them, who, having killed his mother, cruelly vexed the Christians, and afterward turned his wrath against the rebellious Jews.

7. The seven-headed beast from the sea, having ten horns surrounded with diadems, ch. xiii. 1. Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, who were shortly to reign, and who were proclaimed emperors by the army.

8. This beast, having a mouth like a lion, the body like a leopard, the feet like a bear, ver. 2. Avaricious Galba; rash, unchaste, and inconstant Otho; Vitellius, cruel and sluggish, with the German army.

9. One head, i. e. the seventh, cut off, ver. 3. Galba.

10. He who leadeth into captivity, shall be led into captivity; he who killeth with the sword, shall be killed with the sword, ver. 10. Otho, who subdued the murderers of Galba, and slew himself with a dagger; Vitellius, who bound Sabinus with chains, and was himself afterward bound.

11. Another beast rising out of the earth, with two horns, ver. 11. Vespasian and his two sons, Titus and Domitian, elected emperors at the same time in Judea.

12. The number of the wild beast 666, the number of a man, TEITAN, Titan or Titus: T, 300. E, 5. I, 10. T, 300. A, 1. N, 50. making in the whole 666. [But some very respectable MSS. have 616 for the number; if the N be taken away from Teitan, then the letters in Teita make exactly the sum 616.]

13. A man sitting upon a cloud with a crown of gold upon his head, and a sickle in his hand, ch. xiv. ver. 14. Otho and his army, about to prevent supplies for the army of Vitellius.

14. An angel of fire commanding another angel to gather the vintage; the wine-press trodden, whence the blood flows out 1600 furlongs. The followers of Vitellius laying all waste with fire; and the Bebriaci conquering the followers of Otho with great slaughter.

Then follow the seven plagues:

1. The grievous sore, ch. xvi. 2. The diseases of the soldiers of Vitellius, through intemperance.

2. The sea turned into blood, ver. 3. The fleet of Vitellius beaten, and the maritime towns taken from them by the Flavii.

3. The rivers turned into blood, ver. 4. The slaughter of the adherents of Vitellius, at Cremona, and elsewhere, near rivers.

4. The scorching of the sun, ver. 8. The diseases of the Vitellii increasing, and their exhausted bodies impatient of the heat.

5. The seat of the beast darkened, ver. 10. All Rome in commotion through the torpor of Vitellius.

6. Euphrates dried up, and a way made for the kings of the East; and the three unclean spirits like frogs. The Flavii besieging Rome with a treble army; one part of which was by the bank of the Tiber.

The shame of him who is found asleep and naked. Vitellius, ver. 15. Armageddon, ver. 16. The Prætorian camps.

7. The fall of Babylon, ver. 19. The sacking of Rome.

1. The whore, ch. xvii. 1. Rome.

2. The seven kings, ver. 10. Cæsar, Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, Nero, and Galba.

3. The eighth, which is of the seven, ver. 11. Otho, destined by adoption to be the son and successor of Galba.

4. The ten horns, ver. 12—16. The leaders of the Flavian factions.

5. The merchants of the Earth, ch. xviii. 11. i. e. of Rome, which was then the emporium of the whole world.

6. The beast and the false prophet, ch. xix. 20. Vespasian and his family, contrary to all expectation, becoming extinct in Domitian; as the first family of the Cæsars, and of the three princes, Galba, Otho, and Vitellius.

7. The millennium, or a thousand years, ch. xx. 2. Taken from Psa. xc. 4. a time appointed by God, including the space of forty years, from the death of Domitian to the Jewish war, under Adrian.

8. Gog and Magog, going out over the earth, ver. 8. Barchochebas, the false Messiah, with an immense army of the Jews, coming forth suddenly from their caves and dens, tormenting the Christians, and carrying on a destructive war with the Romans.

9. The New Jerusalem, ch. xxi. 1, 2. The Jews being brought so low as to be capable of injuring no longer; the whole world resting after being expiated by wars; and the doctrine of Christ propagated and prevailing every where with incredible celerity."

Wetstein contends, (and he is supported by very great men among the ancients and moderns,) that "the Book of the Revelation was written before the Jewish war, and the civil wars in Italy; that the important events which took place at that time, the greatest that ever happened since the foundation of the world, were worthy enough of the Divine notice, as the affairs of His church were so intimately connected with them; that his method of exposition proves the whole Book to be a well-connected certain series of events: but the common method of interpretation, founded on the hypothesis, that the Book was written after the destruction of Jerusalem is utterly destitute of certainty; and leaves every commentator to the luxuriance of his own fancy, as is sufficiently evident from what has been done already on this Book; some interpreters leading the Reader now to Thebes, now to Athens, and finding in the words of the sacred penman Constantine the Great; Arius, Luther, Calvin; the Jesuits; the Albigenses; the Bohemians; Chemnitius; Elizabeth, queen of England; Cecil, her treasurer; and who not?"—See Wetstein's Gr. Test. Vol. II. pag. 889.

Those who consider the Apocalypse as a prophecy and scenical exhibition of what shall happen to the Christian church to the end of the world, lay this down as a proposition, which comprises the subject of the whole Book:—The contest of Christ with his enemies; and His final victory and triumph over them.—See 1 Cor. xv. 25. Matt. xxiv. Mark xiii. Luke xxi. but what is but briefly hinted in the above Scriptures, is detailed at large in the Apocalypse, and represented by various images nearly in the following order:—

1. The decrees of the Divine Providence concerning what is to come, are declared to John.
2. The manner in which these decrees shall be executed, is painted in the most vivid colours.
3. Then follow thanksgivings to God, the Ruler and Governor of all things, for these manifestations of His power, wisdom, and goodness.

After the Exordium, and the Seven Epistles to the seven churches of Asia Minor, to whose angels or bishops the Book seems to be dedicated, (ch. i. ii. iii.) the scene of the visions is opened in heaven, full of majesty; and John receives a promise of a revelation relative to the future state of the church, ch. iv. v.

The enemies of the church of Christ, which the Christians had then most to fear, were the Jews, the Heathens, and the false teachers. All these are overcome by Christ; and over them He triumphs gloriously. First of all, punishments are threatened to the enemies of the kingdom of Christ, and the preservation of His own followers, in their greatest trials determined; and these determinations are accompanied with the praises and thanksgivings of all the heavenly inhabitants, and of all good men, ch. vi—x.

The transactions of the Christian religion are next recorded, ch. xi—xiv. 5. The Christians are persecuted:—

1. By the Jews; but they were not only preserved, but they increase and prosper.
2. By the Heathens; but in vain do these strive to overthrow the kingdom of Christ; which is no longer confined within the limits of Judea, but spreads among the Gentiles, and diffuses itself over the whole Roman empire, destroying idolatry, and rooting out superstition, in every quarter, ch. xii. xiii. 1—10.
3. False teachers and impostors of various kinds, under the name of Christians, but enemies of the cross of Christ, more intent on promoting the interests of idolatry or false worship than the cause of true religion, chap. xiii. 11—18. exert their influence to corrupt and destroy the church; but, notwithstanding, Christianity becomes more extended, and true believers more confirmed in their holy faith, chap. xiv. 1—5. Then new punishments are decreed against the enemies of Christ, both Jews and Heathens: the calamities coming upon the Jewish nation, before its final overthrow, are pointed out chap. xiv. xv. Next follows a prediction of the calamities which shall take place during the Jewish war; and the civil wars of the Romans during the contentions of Otho and Vitellius, chap. xvi. 1—16. who are to suffer most grievous punishments for their cruelties against the Christians, chap. xvii. The Jewish state being now finally overthrown, chap. xviii. the heavenly inhabitants give praise to God for His justice and goodness; Christ is congratulated for His victory over His enemies, and the more extensive progress of His religion, chap. xix. 1—10.

Opposition is, however, not yet totally ended: idolatry again lifts up its head, and new errors are propagated; but over these also Christ shows Himself to be Conqueror, chap. xix. 11—21. Finally, Satan, who had long reigned by the worship of false gods, errors, superstitions, and wickedness, is deprived of all power and influence; and the concerns of Christianity go on gloriously, chap. xx. 1—6. But, towards the end of the world, new enemies arise, and threaten destruction to the followers of Christ; but vain is their rage, God appears in behalf of His servants, and inflicts the most grievous punishments upon their adversaries, chap. xx. 6—10. The last judgment ensues, ver. 11—15. all the wicked are punished, and the enemies of the truth are chained so as to be able to injure the godly no more: the genuine Christians, who had persevered unto death, are brought to eternal glory; and, freed from all adversities, spend a life that shall never end, in blessedness that knows no bounds, chap. xxi. and xxii.—See Rosenmüller.

Eichorn takes a different view of the plan of this book; though, in substance, not differing much from that above. According to this writer, the whole is represented in the form of a drama, the parts of which are the following:—I. The title, chap. i. 1—3. II. The prologue, chap. i. 4. iv. 22. in which it is stated, that the argument of the drama refers to the Christians; epistles being sent to the churches, which, in the symbolic style, are represented by the number seven. Next follows the drama itself, the parts of which are:—I. The prolusio, or prelude, chap. iv. 1. viii. 5. in which the scenery is prepared and adorned.

Act the first, chap. viii. 6. xii. 17. Jerusalem is taken, and Judaism vanquished by Christianity.

Act the second, chap. xii. 18. xx. 10. Rome is conquered, and Heathenism destroyed by the Christian religion.

Act the third, chap. xx. 11. xxii. 5. The New Jerusalem descends from heaven, or the happiness of the life to come, and which is to endure for ever, is particularly described, chap. xxii. 6—11. Taken in this sense, Eichorn supposes the work to be most exquisitely finished, and its author to have had a truly poetic mind, polished by the highest cultivation, to have been accurately acquainted with the history of all times and nations, and to have enriched himself with their choicest spoils.

My Readers will naturally expect that I should either give a decided preference to some one of the opinions stated above, or produce one of my own: I can do neither; nor can I pretend to explain the book; I do not understand it; and in the things which concern so sublime and awful a subject, I dare not, as my predecessors, indulge in conjectures. I have read elaborate works on the subject, and each seemed right till another was examined. I am satisfied that no certain mode of interpreting the prophecies of this book has yet been found out; and I will not add another monument to the littleness or folly of the human mind, by endeavouring to strike out a new course. I repeat it, I do not understand the book; and I am satisfied that not one who has written on the subject knows any thing more of it than myself: I should, perhaps, except J. E. Clarke, who has written on the Number of the Beast. His interpretation amounts nearly to demonstration; but that is but a small part of the difficulties of the Apocalypse: that interpretation, as the most probable ever yet offered to the public, shall be inserted in its proper place; as also his illustration of the xiith. xiiith. and xviith chapters. As to other matters, I must leave them to God, or to those events which shall point out the prophecy; and then, and probably not till then, will the sense of these visions be explained.

A conjecture concerning the design of the Book, may be safely indulged: thus, then, it has struck me, that The Book of the Apocalypse may be considered as a PROPHET continued in the church of God, uttering predictions relative to all times, which have their successive fulfilment as ages roll on; and thus it stands in the Christian church in the place of the SUCCESSION of PROPHETS in the Jewish church; and by this especial economy PROPHECY is STILL CONTINUED, is ALWAYS SPEAKING; and yet a succession of prophets rendered unnecessary. If this be so, we cannot too much admire the wisdom of the contrivance which still continues the voice and testimony of prophecy, by means of a very short book, without the assistance of any extraordinary messenger, or any succession of such messengers, whose testimony would at all times be liable to suspicion, and be the subject of infidel and malevolent criticism, howsoever unexceptionable to ingenuous minds the credentials of such might appear.

On this ground it is reasonable to suppose, that several prophecies contained in this Book have been already fulfilled; and that, therefore, it is the business of the commentator to point such out. It may be so; but as it is impossible for me to prove that my conjecture is right, I dare not enter into proceedings upon it, and must refer to Bishop Newton, and such writers as have made this their particular study.

After having lived in one of the most eventful eras of the world; after having seen a number of able pens employed in the illustration of this and other prophecies; after having carefully attended to those facts which were supposed to be the incontestable proofs of the fulfilment of such and such visions, seals, trumpets, thunders, and vials, of the Apocalypse; after seeing the issue of that most terrible struggle which the French nation, the French republic, the French consulate, and the French empire, have made to regain and preserve their liberties, which, like arguing in a circle, have terminated where they began, without one political or religious advantage to them or to mankind; and after viewing how the prophecies of this Book were supposed to apply almost exclusively to these events, the writers and explainers of these prophecies keeping pace in their publications with the rapid succession of military operations, and confidently promising the most glorious issue, in the final destruction of superstition, despotism, arbitrary power, and tyranny of all kinds, nothing of which has been realized! I say, viewing all these things, I feel myself at perfect liberty to state that, to my apprehension, all these prophecies have been misapplied and misapprehended; and that the KEY to them is not yet entrusted to the sons of men. My Readers will, therefore, excuse me from any exposure of my ignorance or folly, by attempting to do what many, with much more wisdom and learning, have attempted, and what every man to the present day has failed in, who has preceded me in expositions of this Book. I have no other mountain to heap on those already piled up; and if I had, I have not strength to lift it: those who have courage may again make the trial; already we have had a sufficiency of vain efforts.

Scilicet, atque Ossæ frondosum involvere Olympum:
Ter Pater extructos disjicit fulmine montes. VIRG. G. i. 281.

With mountains piled on mountains, thrice they strove
To scale the steepy battlements of Jove:
And thrice his lightning and red thunder play'd,
And their demolished works in ruin laid. DRYDEN.

I had resolved, for a considerable time, not to meddle with this book, because I foresaw that I could produce nothing satisfactory on it: but when I reflected that the literal sense and phraseology might be made much plainer by the addition of philological and critical notes; and that, as the diction appeared in many places to be purely rabbinical, (a circumstance to which few of its expositors have attended,) it might be rendered plainer by examples from the ancient Jewish writers; and that several parts of it spoke directly of the work of God in the soul of man, and of the conflicts and consolations of the followers of Christ, particularly in the beginning of the Book, I changed my resolution, and have added short notes where I thought I understood the meaning.

I had once thought of giving a catalogue of the writers and commentators on this Book, and had begun a collection of this kind; but the question of Cui bono? What good end is this likely to serve? not meeting with a satisfactory answer in my own mind, caused me to throw this collection aside. I shall notice two only.

1. The curious and learned work, intituled "A Plaine Discovery of the whole Revelation of St. John," written by Sir John Napier, inventor of the Logarithms, I have particularly described in the general Preface to the Holy Scriptures, prefixed to Genesis, pag. xxxi. to which the Reader is requested to refer.

2. Another work, not less singular, and very rare, intituled "The Image of both churches, after the most wonderfull and heavenly Revelation of Sainct John the Evangelist, containing a very fruitfull exposition or paraphrase upon the same: wherein it is conferred with the other Scriptures, and most auctorised histories. Compyled by John Bale, an exyle also in thys lyfe for the faithful testimony of Jesu." Printed at London by Thomas East, 18mo. without date.

The author was at first a Carmelite; but was afterward converted to the Protestant religion. He has turned the whole of the Apocalypse against the Romish church; and it is truly astonishing to see with what address he directs every image, metaphor, and description, contained in this Book, against the corruptions of this church. He was made bishop of Ossory, in Ireland; but was so persecuted by the Papists, that he narrowly escaped with his life, five of his domestics being murdered by them. On the accession of Mary he was obliged to take refuge in the Low Countries, where it appears he compiled this work. As he was bred up a Papist, and was also a priest, he possessed many advantages in attacking the strongest holds of his adversaries. He knew all their secrets, and he uncovered the whole: he was acquainted with all their rites, ceremonies, and superstitions; and finds all distinctly marked in the Apocalypse, which he believes was written to point out the abominations, and to foretell the final destruction, of this corrupt and intolerant church. I shall make a few references to his work in the course of the following Notes. In chap. xvii. ver. 1. the author shows his opinion, and speaks something of himself: Come hither, I will show thee the judgment of the great whore, &c. "Come hither, friende John, I will show thee in secretnesse the tirrible judgement of the great whore, or counterfaite church of hypocrites.—Needs must this whore be Rome, for that she is the great citie which reigneth over the kings of the earth. Evident it is both by Scriptures and Cronicles that in John's dayes, Rome had hir dominion over all the whole world; and being infected with the abominations of all landes, rightly is shee called Babylon, or citie of Confusion. And like as in the Scriptures ofte tymes under the name of Jerusalem is ment the whole kingdom of Juda, so under the name of Rome here may be understanded the unyversall worlde, with all their abominations and divilleshnesses, their idolatryes, witchcraftes, sectes, superstitions, papacyes, priesthoodes, relygions, shavings, anointings, blessings, sensings, processions, and the divil of all such beggeryes. For all the people since Christes assencion, hath this Rome infected with hir pestilent poisons gathered from all idolatrous nations, such time as she held over them the monarchial suppremit. At the wryting of this prophecy, felt John of their cruiltie, being exiled into Pathmos for the faithfull testimony of Jesu. And so did I poore creature, with my poore wife and children, at the gatheringe of this present Commentary, flying into Germanye for the same," &c.

Shall I have the Reader's pardon if I say, that it is my firm opinion that the expositions of this Book have done great disservice to religion; almost every commentator has become a prophet; for, as soon as he began to explain, he began also to prophesy. And what has been the issue? Disappointment laughed at hope's career; and superficial thinkers have been led to despise and reject prophecy itself. I shall sum up all that I wish to say farther in the words of Graserus:—Mihi tota Apocalypsis valdè obscura videtur; et talis, cujus explicatio citra periculum, vix queat tentari. Fateor me hactenus in nullius Scripti Biblici lectione minus proficere, quam in hoc obscurissimo Vaticinio.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

The Revelation of St. John the divine. To this Book the Inscriptions are various. The Revelation—the Revelation of John.—Of John the divine—Of John the divine and evangelist—The Revelation of John the apostle and evangelist—The Revelation of the holy and glorious apostle and evangelist, the beloved virgin John the divine; which he saw in the island of Patmos—The Revelation of Jesus Christ, given to John the divine. These several inscriptions are worthy of little regard: the first verse contains the title of the Book.

Verse 1. The revelation of Jesus Christ] The word Αποκαλυψις, from which we have our word Apocalypse, signifies, literally, a revelation, or discovery of what was concealed, or hidden. It is here said that this revelation, or discovery of hidden things, was given by GOD to Jesus Christ; that Christ gave it to His angel, and that this angel showed it to JOHN, and that John sent it to the CHURCHES. Thus we find it came from God to Christ, from Christ to the angel, from the angel to John, and from John to the church. It is properly, therefore, the Revelation of God, sent by these various agents to His servants at large: and this is the proper title of the Book.

Things which must shortly come to pass] On the mode of interpretation devised by Wetstein, this is plain; for, if the Book were written before the destruction of Jerusalem, and the prophecies in it relate to that destruction, and the civil wars among the Romans, which lasted but three or four years; then it might be said, the Revelation is of things which must shortly come to pass. But, if we consider the Book as referring to the state of the church in all ages; the words here, and those in ver. 3. must be understood of the commencement of the events predicted: as if he had said, in a short time the train of these visions will be put in motion:—

——— et incipient magni procedere menses.

"And those times, pregnant with the most stupendous events, will begin to roll on."

Verse 2. Who bare record of the word of God] Is there a reference here to the first chapter of John's Gospel, In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, &c.? Of this word John did bear record. Or, does the writer mean the fidelity, with which he noted and related the word, doctrines, or prophecies, which he received at this time by revelation from God? This seems more consistent with the latter part of the verse.

Verse 3. Blessed is he that readeth] This is to be understood of the happiness or security of the persons who, reading and hearing the prophecies of those things which were to come to pass shortly, took proper measures to escape from the impending evils.

The time is at hand] Either in which they shall be all fulfilled, or begin to be fulfilled.—See the Note on ver. 1.

These three verses contain the introduction: now, the dedication to the seven churches commences.

4 JOHN to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him [a] which is, and [b] which was, and which is to come; [c] and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne;

[c] Zech. 3. 9. & 4. 10. ch. 3. 1. & 4. 5. & 5. 6.

Verse 4. John, to the seven churches] The apostle begins this much in the manner of the Jewish prophets. They often name themselves in the messages which they receive from God, to deliver to the people:—e. g. The vision of ISAIAH, the son of Amoz, which he saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem.—The words of JEREMIAH, the son of Hilkiah; to whom the word of the Lord came.—The word of the Lord came expressly to EZEKIEL, the priest.—The word of the Lord that came unto HOSEA, the son of Beeri.—The word of the Lord that came to JOEL.—The words of AMOS, who was among the herdsmen of Tekoa.—The vision of OBADIAH; thus saith the Lord.—The word of the Lord came unto JONAH.—So the Revelation of Jesus Christ, which he sent and signified to his servant JOHN.—JOHN, to the seven churches, &c.

The Asia here mentioned was what is called Asia Minor, or the Lydian or Proconsular Asia; the seven churches were those of Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea. Of these as they occur: we are not to suppose that these were the only Christian churches then in Asia Minor; there were several others then in Phrygia, Pamphylia, Galatia, Pontus, Cappadocia, &c. &c. But these seven were those which lay nearest to the apostle, and were more particularly under his care; though the message was sent to the churches in general; and perhaps it concerns the whole Christian world. But the number seven may be here used as the number of perfection; as the Hebrews use the seven names of the heavens, the seven names of the earth, the seven patriarchs, seven suns, seven kings, seven years, seven months, seven days, &c. &c. in which the Rabbins find a great variety of mysteries.

Grace be unto you] This form of apostolical benediction we have often seen in the preceding Epistles.

From him which is, and which was, and which is to come] This phraseology is purely Jewish, and probably taken from the Tetragrammaton, יהוה YEHOVAH; which is supposed to include in itself all time past, present, and future. But they often use the phrase, of which the ὁ ων, και ὁ ην, και ὁ ερχομενος, of the apostle is a literal translation. So in Sohar Chadash, fol. 7. 1. "Rabbi Jose said, By the name Tetragrammaton (i. e. יהוה Jehovah,) the higher and lower regions, the heavens, the earth, and all they contain, were perfected; and they are all before Him reputed as nothing; והוא היה והוה והוא יהיה vehu haiyah, vehu hovah, vehu yehiyeh; and HE IS, and HE WAS, and HE WILL BE. So in Shemoth Rabba, sect. 3. fol. 105. 2. The holy blessed God said to Moses, tell them—אני שהיתי ואני הוא עכשיו ואני הוא לעתיד לבא ani shehayiti veani hu acashaio, veani hu leated labo; I WAS, and I NOW AM, and I WILL BE IN FUTURE."

In Chasad Shimuel Rab. Samuel ben David asks, "Why are we commanded to use three hours of prayer?—Answer, These hours point out the holy blessed God: שהוא היה הוה ויהיה shehu haiyah, hovah, veyehiyeh; he who WAS, who IS, and who SHALL BE. The MORNING prayer points out Him who WAS before the foundation of the world; the NOON-DAY prayer points out Him who IS; and the EVENING prayer points out Him who IS TO COME. This phraseology is exceedingly appropriate, and strongly expresses the eternity of God; for we have no other idea of time than as past, or now existing, or yet to exist; nor have we any idea of eternity but as that duration called by some eternitas à parte ante, the eternity that was before time, and eternitas à parte post, the endless duration that shall be when time is no more. That which WAS, is the eternity before time; that which IS, is TIME itself; and that which is to come, is the eternity which shall be when time is no more.

The seven Spirits—before his throne] The ancient Jews, who represented the throne of God as the throne of an Eastern monarch, supposed that there were seven ministering angels before this throne, as there were seven ministers attendant on the throne of a Persian monarch. We have an ample proof of this, Tobit xii. 15. I am Raphael, one of the SEVEN HOLY ANGELS, which present the prayers of the saints, and which go in and out before the glory of the Holy One. And in Jonathan ben Uzziel's Targum, on Gen. xi. 7. God said to the SEVEN ANGELS which stand before Him, Come now, &c.

In Pirkey Eliezer, 4. and vii. "The angels which were first created minister before Him, without the vail." Sometimes they represent them as seven cohorts or troops of angels, under whom are thirty inferior orders.

That seven ANGELS are here meant, and not the Holy Spirit, is most evident from the place, the number, and the tradition. Those who imagine the Holy Ghost to be intended, suppose the number seven is used to denote His manifold gifts and graces. That these seven spirits are angels, see chap. iii. 1. iv. 5. and particularly v. 6. where they are called the seven spirits of God SENT FORTH INTO ALL THE EARTH.

Verse 5. The faithful witness] The true Teacher, whose testimony is infallible, and whose sayings must all come to pass.

The first begotten of the dead] See the Note on Coloss. i. 18.

The prince of the kings] Ὁ ἀρχων, the Chief or Head of all earthly potentates; who has them all under His dominion and control, and can dispose of them as He will.

Unto him that loved us] This should begin a new verse, as it is the commencement of a new subject. Our salvation is attributed to the love of God, who gave His Son; and to the love of Christ, who died for us.—See John iii. 16.

Washed us from our sins] The redemption of the soul, with the remission of sins, and purification from unrighteousness, is here, as in all the New Testament, attributed to the blood of Christ shed on the cross for man.

Verse 6. Kings and priests] See on 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9. But, instead of βασιλεις και ἱερεις, kings and priests, the most reputable MSS. Versions, and Fathers, have βασιλειαν ἱερεις, a kingdom and priests; i. e. a kingdom of priests, or a royal priesthood. The regal and sacerdotal dignities are the two highest that can possibly exist among men; and these two are here mentioned to show the glorious prerogatives and state of the children of God.

To him be glory] That is, to Christ; for it is of Him that the prophet speaks, and of none other.

For ever and ever] Εις τους αἰωνας των αἰωνων, to ages of ages; or, rather, through all indefinite periods; through all time, and through eternity.

Amen.] A word of affirmation and approbation; so it shall be: and so it ought to be.

Verse 7. Behold, he cometh with clouds] This relates to His coming to execute judgment on the enemies of His religion: perhaps to His coming to destroy Jerusalem, as He was to be particularly manifested to them that pierced Him; which must mean the incredulous and rebellious Jews.

And all kindreds of the earth] Πασαι αι φυλαι της γης, all the tribes of the land. By this the Jewish people are most evidently intended; and therefore the whole verse may be understood as predicting the destruction of the Jews; and is a presumptive proof that the Apocalypse was written before the final overthrow of the Jewish state.

Even so, Amen] Ναι, αμην, yea, Amen. It is true, so be it. Our Lord will come and execute judgment on the Jews and Gentiles. This the Jews and Romans particularly felt.

Verse 8. I am Alpha and Omega] I am from eternity to eternity. This mode of speech is borrowed from the Jews, who express the whole compass of things by א aleph and ת tau; the first and last letters of the Hebrew alphabet: but as St. John was writing in Greek, he accommodates the whole to the Greek alphabet, of which Α alpha, and Ω omega, are the first and last letters. With the Rabbins מא' ועד ת mealeph vead tau, "from aleph to tau," expressed the whole of a matter, from the beginning to the end. So in Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 17. 4. Adam transgressed the whole law, from aleph to tau; i. e. from the beginning to the end. Ibid. fol. 48. 4. Abraham observed the law from aleph to tau; i. e. he kept it entirely, from beginning to end. Ibid. fol. 128. 3. When the holy blessed God pronounced a blessing on the Israelites, He did it from aleph to tau; i. e. He did it perfectly.

The beginning and the ending] That is, as aleph, or alpha, is the beginning of the alphabet, so am I the Author and Cause of all things: as tau, or omega, is the end or last letter of the alphabet, so am I the End of all things; the Destroyer as well as the Establisher of all things. This clause is wanting in almost every MS. and Version of importance. It appears to have been added first as an explanatory Note, and in process of time crept into the text. It is worthy of remark, that as the union of א aleph and ת tau in Hebrew, make את ath, or et, which the Rabbins interpret of the first matter out of which all things were formed; see on Gen. i. 1. so the union of A alpha and Ω omega in Greek, make the verb αω, I breathe; and may very properly in such a symbolical book point out Him in whom we live, and move, and have our being: for, having formed man out of the dust of the earth, He breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and he became a living soul: and it is by the inspiration or in-breathing of His Spirit, that the souls of men are quickened; made alive from the dead, and fitted for life eternal. He adds also, that He is the Almighty, the all-powerful Framer of the universe, and the Inspirer of men.

Verse 9. Your brother] A Christian, begotten of God, and incorporated in the heavenly family.

Companion in tribulation] Suffering under the persecution in which you also suffer.

In the kingdom] For we are a kingdom of priests unto God.

And patience of Jesus] Meekly bearing all indignities, privations, and sufferings, for the sake, and after the example, of our Lord and Master.

The isle that is called Patmos] This island is one of the Sporades, and lies in the Ægean Sea, between the island of Icaria, and the promontory of Miletus. It is now called Pactino, Patmol, or Palmosa. It has derived all its celebrity from being the place to which St. John was banished by one of the Roman Emperors; whether Domitian, Claudius, or Nero, is not agreed on: but it was most probably the latter. The island has a convent on a well-fortified hill, dedicated to John the apostle; the inhabitants are said to amount to about three hundred men, and about twenty women to one man. It is very barren, producing very little grain, but abounding in partridges, quails, turtles, pigeons, snipes, and rabbits. It has many good harbours, and is much infested by pirates. Patmos, its capital, and chief harbour, lies in east LONG. 26. 24. north LAT. 37. 24. The whole island is about thirty miles in circumference.

For the testimony of Jesus Christ.] For preaching Christianity, and converting Heathens to the Lord Jesus.

Verse 10. I was in the Spirit] That is, I received the Spirit of prophecy, and was under its influence when the first vision was exhibited.

The Lord's day] The first day of the week, observed as the Christian sabbath, because on it Jesus Christ rose from the dead: therefore it was called the Lord's day; and has taken place of the Jewish sabbath, throughout the Christian world.

I heard behind me a great voice] This voice came unexpectedly and suddenly. He felt himself under the Divine afflatus; but did not know what scenes were to be represented.

As of a trumpet] This was calculated to call in every wandering thought, to fix his attention, and solemnize his whole frame. Thus God prepared Moses to receive the law. See Exod. xix. 16, 19, &c.

Verse 11. I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and] This whole clause is wanting in ABC. thirty-one others; some editions; the Syriac, Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Slavonic, Vulgate, Arethas, Andreas, and Primasius. Griesbach has left it out of the text.

Saying—What thou seest, write in a book] Carefully note down every thing that is represented to thee. John had the visions from heaven; but he described them in his own language and manner.

Send it unto the seven churches] The names of which immediately follow. In Asia—This is wanting in the principal MSS. and Versions. Griesbach has left it out of the text.

Ephesus] This was a city of Ionia, in Asia Minor, situated at the mouth of the river Cayster, on the shore of the Ægean Sea, about fifty miles south of Smyrna.—See Preface to the Epistle to the Ephesians.

Smyrna] Now called also Ismir, is the largest and richest city of Asia Minor. It is situated about one hundred and eighty-three miles west by south of Constantinople, on the shore of the Ægean Sea. It is supposed to contain about one hundred and forty thousand inhabitants, of whom there are from fifteen to twenty thousand Greeks, six thousand Armenians, five thousand Roman Catholics, one hundred and forty Protestants, eleven thousand Jews, and fifteen thousand Turks. It is a beautiful city, but often ravaged by the plague, and seldom two years together free from earthquakes. In 1758, the city was nearly desolated by the plague; scarcely a sufficient number of the inhabitants survived to gather in the fruits of the earth. In 1688 there was a terrible earthquake here, which overthrew a great number of houses: in one of the shocks, the rock on which the castle stood, opened, swallowed up the castle, and five thousand persons! On these accounts, nothing but the love of gain, so natural to man, could induce any person to make it his residence; though, in other respects, it can boast of many advantages. In this city the Turks have nineteen mosques; the Greeks two churches; the Armenians one, and the Jews eight synagogues; and the English and Dutch factories have each a chaplain. Smyrna is one hundred miles north of the island of Rhodes, long. 27. 25. E. lat. 38. 28. N.

Pergamos] A town of Mysia, situated on the river Caicus. It was the royal residence of Eumenes, and the kings of the race of the Attali. It was anciently famous for its library, which contained, according to Plutarch, two hundred thousand volumes. It was here that the membranæ Pergameniæ, Pergamenian skins, were invented; from which we derive our word parchment. Pergamos was the birthplace of Galen; and in it P. Scipio died. It is now called Pergamo, and Bergamo, and is situated in long. 27. 0. E. lat. 39. 13. N.

Thyatira] Now called Akissat and Ak-kissar, a city of Natolia, in Asia Minor, seated on the river Hermus, in a plain eighteen miles broad, and is about fifty miles from Pergamos: long. 27. 49. E. lat. 38. 15. N. The houses are chiefly built of earth, but the mosques are all of marble. Many remarkable ancient inscriptions have been discovered in this place.

Sardis] Now called Sardo, and Sart, a town of Asia, in Natolia, about forty miles east from Smyrna. It is seated on the side of mount Tmolus, and was once the capital of the Lydian kings, and here Crœsus reigned. It is now a poor inconsiderable village. Long. 28. 5. E. lat. 37. 51. N.

Philadelphia] A city of Natolia, seated at the foot of mount Tmolus, by the river Cogamus. It was founded by Attalus Philadelphus, brother of Eumenes, from whom it derived its name. It is now called Alah-sheker, and is about forty miles ESE of Smyrna. Long. 28. 15. E. lat. 38. 28. N.

Laodicea] A town of Phrygia, on the river Lycus; first called Diospolis, or the city of Jupiter. It was built by Antiochus Theos, and named after his consort Laodice. See the Note on Col. ii. 1. And, for a very recent account of these seven churches, see a letter from the reverend Henry Lindsay, inserted at the end of chap. iii.

Verse 12. And I turned] For he had heard the voice behind him. To see the voice; i. e. the Person from whom the voice came.

Seven golden candlesticks] Επτα λυχνιας χρυσας, seven golden lamps. It is absurd to say, a golden, silver, or brazen candle*stick*. These seven lamps represented the seven churches, in which the light of God was continually shining, and the love of God continually burning. And they are here represented as golden, to show how precious they were in the sight of God. This is a reference to the temple at Jerusalem, where there was a candlestick, or chandelier, of seven branches; or rather six branches; three springing out on either side, and one in the centre.—See Exod. xxvii. 17—23. This reference to the temple seems to intimate that the temple of Jerusalem was a type of the whole Christian church.

Verse 13. Like unto the Son of man] This seems a reference to Dan. vii. 13. This was our blessed Lord Himself, ver. 18.

Clothed with a garment down to the foot] This is a description of the high-priest, in his sacerdotal robes.—See these described at large in the Notes on Exod. xxviii. 4, &c. Jesus is our High-priest, even in heaven. He is still discharging the sacerdotal functions before the throne of God.

Golden girdle.] The emblem both of regal and sacerdotal dignity.

Verse 14. His head and his hairs were white like wool] This was not only an emblem of His antiquity; but it was the evidence of His glory: for the whiteness or splendour of His head and hair, doubtless proceeded from the rays of light and glory which encircled His head, and darted from it in all directions. The splendour around the head was termed by the Romans nimbus, and by us a glory; and was wool, as white as snow; [a] and his eyes were as a flame of fire; represented round the heads of gods, deified persons, and saints.

His eyes were as a flame of fire] To denote His omniscience, and the all-penetrating nature of the Divine knowledge.

Verse 15. His feet like unto fine brass] An emblem of His stability and permanence, brass being considered the most durable of all metallic substances.

The original word, χαλκολιβανῳ, means the famous aurichalcum, or factitious metal, which, according to Suidas, εἰδος ηλεκτρου, τιμιωτερον χρυσου, was "of the colour of amber, and more precious than gold." It seems to have been a composition of gold, silver, and brass; and the same with the Corinthian brass, so highly famed and valued: for, when Lucius Mummius took and burnt the city of Corinth, many statues of these three metals, being melted, had run together, and formed the composition already mentioned, and which was held in as high estimation as gold.—See Pliny, Hist. Nat. lib. 34. 3. 2. Florus, lib. 2. c. 16. It may, however, mean no more than copper melted with the lapis calaminaris, which converts it into brass; and the flame that proceeds from the metal, during this operation, is one of the most intensely and unsufferably vivid that can be imagined. I have often seen several furnaces employed in this operation; and the flames bursting up through the earth, for these furnaces are under ground, always called to remembrance this description given by St. John—His feet of fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; the propriety and accuracy of which none could doubt, and every one must feel, who has viewed this most dazzling operation.

His voice as the sound of many waters.] The same description we find in Ezek. xliii. 2. The glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east; and His voice was like the noise of many waters: and the earth shined with his glory.

Verse 16. In his right hand seven stars] The stars are afterward interpreted as representing the seven angels, messengers, or bishops, of the seven churches. Their being in the right hand of Christ, shows that they are under His special care, and most powerful protection.—See below.

Out of his mouth went a sharp twoedged sword] This is no doubt intended to point out the judgments about to be pronounced by Christ against the rebellious Jews, and persecuting Romans: God's judgments were just now going to fall upon both. The sharp twoedged sword may represent the word of God in general, according to that saying of the apostle, Heb. iv. 12. The word of God is quick and powerful, sharper than any twoedged sword; piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, &c. And the word of God is termed the sword of the Spirit, Eph. vi. 17.

And his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength.] His face was like the disk of the sun, in the brightest summer's day, when there were no clouds to abate the splendour of his rays. A similar form of expression is found in Judges v. 31. Let them that love him be as the sun when he GOETH FORTH IN HIS MIGHT. And a similar description may be found, Midrash in Yalcut Simeoni, Part I. fol. 55. 4. "When Moses and Aaron came and stood before Pharaoh, they appeared like the ministering angels, and their stature like the cedars of Lebanon; וגלגלי עיניהם דומים לגלגלי חמה vegolgoley eyneyhem domim legolgoley chamah; and the pupils of their eyes were like the wheels of the sun; and their beards were as the grape of the palm-trees; וזיו פניהם כזיו חמה veziv peneyhem keziv chamah; and the SPLENDOUR of THEIR FACES was as the SPLENDOUR of the SUN.

Verse 17. I fell at his feet as dead] The appearance of the glory of the Lord had the same effect upon Ezekiel, ch. i. 28. and the appearance of Gabriel had the same effect on Daniel, ch. viii. 17. The terrible splendour of such majesty was more than the apostle could bear; and he fell down, deprived of his senses; but was soon enabled to behold the vision by a communication of strength from our Lord's right hand.

Verse 18. I am he that liveth, and was dead] I am Jesus, the Saviour, who, though the Fountain of life, have died for mankind; and being raised from the dead, I shall die no more, the great Sacrifice being consummated. And have the keys of death and the grave; so that I can destroy the living, and raise the dead. The key here signifies the power and authority over life, death, and the grave.

This is also a rabbinical form of speech. In the Jerusalem Targum on Gen. xxx. 22. are these words,—"There are four KEYS in the hand of God which He never trusts either to angel or seraph. 1. The key of the rain. 2. The key of provision. 3. The key of the grave. And, 4. The key of the barren womb."

In Sanhedrin, fol. 113. 1. it is said, "When the son of the woman of Sarepta died, Elijah requested that to him might be given the key of the resurrection of the dead. They said to him, there are three KEYS, which are not given into the hand of the apostle; the key of life, the key of the rain, and the key of the resurrection of the dead." From these examples it is evident that we should understand ἀδης hades, here, not as hell, nor the place of separate spirits, but merely as the grave; and the key we find to be merely the emblem of power and authority. Christ can both save and destroy; can kill and make alive. Death is still under His dominion, and He can recall the dead whensoever He pleases. He is the Resurrection and the Life.

Verse 19. Write the things which thou hast seen] These visions and prophecies are for general instruction; and, therefore, every circumstance must be faithfully recorded. What he had seen, was to be written; what he was about to see relative to the seven churches, must be also written: and what he was to see afterward, concerning other churches and states, was to be recorded likewise.

Verse 20. The mystery] That is, the allegorical explanation of the seven stars is the seven angels or ministers of the churches; and the allegorical meaning of the seven golden lamps, is the seven churches themselves.

1. In the seven stars there may be an allusion to the seals of different offices under potentates, each of which had its own particular seal, which verified all instruments from that office; and as these seals were frequently set in rings, which were worn on the fingers, there may be an allusion to those brilliants set in rings, and worn επι της δεξιας, UPON the right hand. In Jer. xxii. 24. Jeremiah is represented as a signet on the right hand of the Lord; and that such signets were in rings, see Gen. xxxviii. 18, 25. Exod. xxviii. 11. Dan. vi. 17. Hag. ii. 23. On close examination, we shall find that all the symbols in this Book have their foundation either in nature, fact, custom, or general opinion.

2. The churches are represented by these lamps; they hold the oil and the fire, and dispense the light. A lamp is not light in itself; it is only the instrument of dispensing light, and it must receive both oil and fire, before it can dispense any: so, no church has in itself either grace or glory; it must receive all from Christ, its Head; else it can dispense neither light nor life.

3. The ministers of the gospel are signets, or seals, of Jesus Christ; He uses them to stamp His truth, to accredit it, and give it currency. But, as a seal can mark nothing of itself, unless applied by a proper hand; so the ministers of Christ can do no good, seal no truth, impress no soul, unless the great Owner condescend to use them.

4. How careful should the church be that it have the oil and the light, that it continue to burn and send forth Divine knowledge. In vain does any church pretend to be a church of Christ, if it dispense no light: if souls are not enlightened, quickened, and converted in it. If Jesus walk in it, its light will shine both clearly and strong, and sinners will be converted unto Him; and the members of that church will be children of the light, and walk as children of the light, and of the day; and there will be no occasion of stumbling in them.

5. How careful should the ministers of Christ be, that they proclaim nothing as truth, and accredit nothing as truth but what comes from their Master.

They should also take heed, lest, after having preached to others, themselves should be castaways; lest God should say unto them as He said of Coniah,—As I live, saith the Lord, though Coniah, the son of Jehoiakim, were the SIGNET UPON MY RIGHT HAND, yet would I pluck thee thence.

On the other hand, if they be faithful, their labour shall not be in vain: and their safety shall be great. He that toucheth them toucheth the apple of God's eye; and none shall be able to pluck them out of His hand. They are the angels and ambassadors of the Lord; their persons are sacred; they are the messengers of the churches, and the glory of Christ. Should they lose their lives in the work, it will be only a speedier entrance into an eternal glory.

The rougher the way, the shorter their stay;
The troubles that rise
Shall gloriously hurry their souls to the skies.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

I must here advertise my Readers—1. That I do not perceive any metaphorical or allegorical meaning in the epistles to these churches. 2. I consider the churches as real; and that their spiritual state is here really and literally pointed out; and, that they have no reference to the state of the church of Christ in all ages of the world, as has been imagined; and that the notion of what has been termed the Ephesian state, the Smyrnian state, the Pergamenean state, the Thyatirian state, &c. &c. is unfounded, absurd, and dangerous; and such expositions should not be entertained by any who wish to arrive at a sober and rational knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. 3. I consider the angel of the church as signifying the messenger, the pastor sent by Christ and His apostles to teach and edify that church. 4. I consider what is spoken to this angel as spoken to the whole church; and that it is not his particular state that is described, but the states of the people in general, under his care.

The Epistle to the Church at Ephesus.

Verse 1. Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus] By ἀγγελος, angel, we are to understand the messenger or person sent by God to preside over this church: and to him the Epistle is directed, not as pointing out his state, but the state of the church under his care. Angel of the church, here, answers exactly to that officer of the synagogue among the Jews, called שליח ציבור sheliach tsibbor, the messenger of the church, whose business it was to read, pray, and teach, in the synagogue. The church at Ephesus is first addressed, as being the place where John chiefly resided; and the city itself was the metropolis of that part of Asia. The angel or bishop at this time was, most probably, Timothy, who presided over that church before St. John took up his residence there; and who is supposed to have continued in that office till A. D. 97. and to have been martyred a short time before St. John's return from Patmos.

Holdeth the seven stars] Who particularly preserves, and guides, and upholds, not only the ministers of those seven churches, but all the genuine ministers of his gospel, in all ages and places.

Walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks] Is the supreme Bishop and Head not only of those churches, but of all the churches or congregations of His people throughout the world.

Verse 2. I know thy works] For the eyes of the Lord are throughout the earth, beholding the evil and the good: and being omnipresent, all things are continually open and naked before Him. It is worthy of remark, that whatsoever is praiseworthy in any of these churches, is first mentioned: thereby intimating that God is more intent on finding out the good, than the evil, in any person or church; and that those who wish to reform such as have fallen, or are not making sufficient advances in the Divine life, should take occasion, from the good which yet remains, to encourage them to set out afresh for the kingdom of heaven. The fallen, or backsliding, who have any tenderness of conscience left, are easily discouraged; and are apt to think, that there is no seed left from which any harvest can be reasonably expected.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

hast tried them [a] which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars:

3 And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast [b] not fainted.

4 Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love.

5 Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; [c] or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent.

6 But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of [d] the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate.

[a] 2 Cor. 11. 13. 2 Pet. 2. 1.——[b] Gal. 6. 9. Heb. 12. 3, 5.

[c] Matt. 21. 41, 43.——[d] Ver. 15.

Let such be told, that there is still a seed of godliness remaining; and that it requires only watching and strengthening the things which remain, by prompt application to God through Christ, in order to bring them back to the full enjoyment of all they have lost; and to renew them in the spirit of their mind. Ministers continually harping on ye are dead, ye are dead, there is little or no Christianity among you, &c. &c. are a contagion in a church; and spread desolation and death wheresoever they go. Is it not easy to say in such cases—"Ye have lost ground; but ye have not lost all your ground: ye might have been much farther advanced; but through mercy ye are still in the way. The Spirit of God is grieved by you; but, it is evident, He has not forsaken you. Ye have not walked in the light as ye should; but your candlestick is not yet removed, and still the light shines. Ye have not much zeal, but ye have a little. In short, God still strives with you; still loves you; still waits to be gracious to you; take courage, set out afresh; come to God through Christ; believe—love—obey—and you will soon find days more blessed than you have ever yet experienced." Exhortations and encouragements of this kind are sure to produce the most blessed effects; and under such the work of God infallibly revives.

And thy labour] He knew their works in general. Though they had left their first love, yet still they had so much love as excited them to labour, and enabled them to bear persecution patiently, and to keep the faith; for they could not tolerate evil men: and they had put fictitious apostles to the test, and had found them to be liars, pretending a Divine commission while they had none; and teaching false doctrines as if they were the truths of God.

Verse 3. And hast borne] The same things mentioned in the preceding verse, but in an inverted order; the particular reason of which does not appear; perhaps it was intended to show more forcibly to this church, that there was no good which they had done, nor evil which they had suffered, that was forgotten before God.

And hast not fainted] They must therefore have had a considerable portion of this love remaining, else they could not have thus acted.

Verse 4. Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee] The clause should be read according to the Greek thus:—But I have against thee, that thou hast left thy first love. They did not retain that strong and ardent affection for God and sacred things which they had, when first brought to the knowledge of the truth, and justified by faith in Christ.

Verse 5. Remember] Consider the state of grace in which you once stood; the happiness, love, and joy, which you felt, when ye received remission of sins; the zeal ye had for God's glory, and the salvation of mankind; your willing obedient spirit, your cheerful self-denial, your fervour in private prayer, your detachment from the world, and your heavenly-mindedness. Remember, consider all these.

Whence thou art fallen] Fallen from all those blessed dispositions and gracious feelings already mentioned. Or, remember what a loss you have sustained; for so εκπιπτειν is frequently used by the best Greek writers.

Repent] Be deeply humbled before God for having so carelessly guarded the Divine treasure.

Do the first works] Resume your former zeal and diligence; watch, fast, pray, reprove sin, carefully attend all the ordinances of God; walk as in his sight, and rest not till you have recovered all your lost ground, and got back the evidence of your acceptance with your Maker.

I will come unto thee quickly] In the way of judgment.

And will remove thy candlestick] Take away My ordinances, remove your ministers, and send you a famine of the word. As there is here an allusion to the candlestick in the tabernacle and temple, which could not be removed, without suspending the whole Levitical service; so the threatening here intimates, that if they did not repent, &c. He would unchurch them; they should no longer have a pastor, no longer have the word and sacraments, and no longer have the presence of the Lord Jesus.

Verse 6. The deeds of the Nicolaitanes] These were, as is commonly supposed, a sect of the Gnostics, who taught the most impure doctrines, and followed the most impure practices. They are also supposed to have derived their origin from Nicolas, one of the seven deacons, mentioned Acts vi. 5. where see the Note. The Nicolaitans taught the community of wives; that adultery and fornication were things indifferent; that eating meats offered to idols was quite lawful; and mixed several Pagan rites with the Christian ceremonies. Augustin, Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, and Tertullian, have spoken largely concerning them. See more in my Preface to 2 Peter, pag. 5. where are several particulars concerning these heretics.

Verse 7. He that hath an ear] Let every intelligent person, and every Christian man, attend carefully to what the Holy Spirit, in this and the following Epistles, says to the churches.—See the Note on Matt. xi. 15. where the same form of speech occurs.

To him that overcometh] To him who continues steadfast in the faith, and uncorrupt in his life; who faithfully confesses Jesus, and neither imbibes the doctrines nor is led away by the error of the wicked;—will I give to eat of the tree of life. As he who conquered his enemies had, generally, not only great honour, but also a reward; so here a great reward is promised τῳ νικῶντι, to the conqueror: and as in the Grecian games, to which there may be an allusion, the conqueror was crowned with the leaves of some tree; here is promised, that they should eat of the fruit of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God; that is, that they should have a happy and glorious immortality. There is also here an allusion to Gen. ii. 9. where it is said God made the tree of life to grow out of the midst of the garden. And it is very likely that by eating the fruit of this tree, the immortality of Adam was secured; and on this it was made dependent. When Adam transgressed, he was expelled from this garden, and no more permitted to eat of the tree of life: hence he became necessarily mortal. This tree, in all its sacramental effects, is secured and restored to man by the incarnation, death, and resurrection, of Christ. The tree of life is frequently spoken of by the rabbins; and by it they generally mean the immortality of the soul, and a final state of blessedness.—See many examples in Schoettgen. They talk also of a celestial and terrestrial paradise. The former, they say, "is for the reception of the souls of the just perfect; and differs as much from the earthly paradise as light from darkness."

The Epistle to the Church at Smyrna.

Verse 8. Unto the angel] This was probably the famous Polycarp: see below.

These things saith the first and the last] He who is eternal; from whom all things come, and to whom all things must return. Which was dead; for the redemption of the world; and is alive—to die no more for ever, His glorified humanity being enthroned at the Father's right hand.

Verse 9. I know thy works] As He had spoken to the preceding church, so He speaks to this: I know all that ye have done; and all that ye have suffered. The tribulation here mentioned must mean persecution, either from the Jews, the Heathens, or from the heretics; who, because of their flesh-pampering doctrine, must have had many partisans at Smyrna.

And poverty] Stripped probably of all their temporal possessions, because of their attachment to the gospel.

But thou art rich] Rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom of Christ.

The blasphemy of them which say they are Jews] There were persons there who professed Judaism, and had a synagogue in the place, and professed to worship the true God: but they had no genuine religion; and they served the devil, rather than God. They applied a sacred name to an unholy thing: and this is one meaning of the word blasphemy in this book.

Verse 10. Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer] This may be addressed particularly to Polycarp, if he was at that time the bishop of this church. He had much to suffer; and was at last burnt alive at Smyrna, about the year of our Lord 166. We have a very ancient account of his martyrdom; which has been translated by Cave, and is worthy of the Reader's perusal. That account states, that the Jews were particularly active in this martyrdom; and brought the fagots, &c. by which he was consumed. Such persons, must indeed have been of the synagogue of Satan.

Ten days] As the days in this Book are what is commonly called prophetic days, each answering to a year, the ten years of tribulation may denote ten years of persecution; and this was precisely the duration of the persecution under Diocletian; during which all the Asiatic churches were grievously afflicted. Others understand the expression as implying frequency and abundance, as it does in other parts of Scripture. Gen. xxxi. 7, 41. Thou hast changed my wages TEN TIMES; i. e. thou hast frequently changed my wages. Numb. xiv. 22. Those men have tempted me now these TEN TIMES: i. e. they have frequently and grievously tempted and sinned against me. Neh. iv. 12. The Jews that dwelt by them came and said unto us TEN TIMES: i. e. they were frequently coming and informing us that our adversaries intended to attack us. Job xix. 3. These TEN TIMES have ye reproached me: i. e. ye have loaded me with continual reproaches. Dan. i. 20. In all matters of wisdom—he found them TEN TIMES better than all the magicians: i. e. the king frequently consulted Daniel and his companions, and found them more abundantly informed and wise than all his counsellors.

Some think the shortness of the affliction is here intended, and that the ten days are to be understood as in Terence, Heaut. Act v. S. 1. ver. 36. Decem dierum vix mî est familia. I have enjoyed my family but a short time.

Be thou faithful unto death] Be firm, hold fast the faith; confess Christ to the last, and at all hazards; and thou shalt have a crown of life; thou shalt be crowned with life; have an eternal happy existence, though thou suffer a temporal death. It is said of Polycarp, that when brought before the judge, and commanded to abjure and blaspheme Christ, he firmly answered, "Eighty and six years have I served Him, and He never did me wrong; how then can I blaspheme my King, who hath saved me?" He was then adjudged to the flames, and suffered cheerfully for Christ, his Lord and Master.

Verse 11. He that overcometh] The conqueror, who has stood firm in every trial, and vanquished all his adversaries

Shall not be hurt of the second death.] That is, an eternal separation from God and the glory of His power; as what we commonly mean by final perdition. This is another rabbinical mode of speech in very frequent use; and by it they understand the punishment of hell in a future life.

The Epistle to the Church at Pergamos.

Verse 12. The angel of the church in Pergamos] See the description of this place, ch. i. 2.

Which hath the sharp sword] See on ch. i. 16. The sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, cuts every way: it convinces of sin, righteousness, and judgment; pierces between the joints and the marrow; divides between the soul and spirit; dissects the whole mind, and exhibits a regular anatomy of the soul. It not only reproves and exposes sin, but it slays the ungodly; pointing out and determining the punishment they shall endure. Jesus has the sword with the two edges, because He is the Saviour of sinners, and the Judge of quick and dead.

Verse 13. Where Satan's seat is] Οπου ὁ θρονος του Σατανα, where Satan has his throne; where he reigns as king, and is universally obeyed. It was a maxim among the Jews, that where the law of God was not studied, there Satan dwelt; but he was obliged to leave the place where a synagogue or academy was established.

Thou holdest fast my name] Notwithstanding that the profession of Christianity exposed this church to the bitterest persecution, they held fast the name of Christian, which they had received from Jesus Christ;—and did not deny his faith; for, when brought to the trial, they openly professed themselves disciples and followers of their Lord and Master.

Antipas was my faithful martyr] Who this Antipas was we cannot tell. We only know that he was a Christian, and probably bore some office in the church; and became illustrious by his martyrdom in the cause of Christ. There is a work extant, called The Acts of Antipas, which makes him bishop of Pergamos, and states that he was put to death by being inclosed in a burning brazen bull. But this story confutes itself, as the Romans, under whose government Pergamos then was, never put any person to death in this way. It is supposed that he was murdered by some mob, who chose this way to vindicate the honour of their god Æsculapius, in opposition to the claims of our Lord Jesus.

Verse 14. I have a few things against thee] Their good deeds are first carefully sought out and commended; what was wrong in them is touched with a gentle but effectual hand.

The followers of Balaam, the Nicolaitans, and the Gnostics, were probably all the same kind of persons; but see on ver. 6. What the doctrine of Balaam was, see the Notes on Numb. xxiv. xxv. and xxxi. It appears that there were some then in the church at Pergamos who held eating things offered to idols, in honour of those idols, and fornication, indifferent things. They associated with idolaters in the Heathen temples, and partook with them in their religious festivals.

Verse 15. The doctrine of the Nicolaitanes] See on ver. 6.

Verse 16. Will fight against them with the sword of my mouth]—See on ver. 12. He now speaks for their edification and salvation; but if they do not repent, He will shortly declare those judgments which shall unavoidably fall upon them.

Verse 17. The hidden manna] It was a constant tradition of the Jews that the ark of the covenant, the tables of stone, Aaron's rod, the holy anointing oil, and the pot of manna, were hidden by king Josiah, when Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldeans; and that these shall all be restored in the days of the Messiah. This manna was hidden, but Christ promises to give it to him that is conqueror. Jesus is the ark, the oil, the rod, the testimony, and the manna. He who is partaker of His grace has all those things in their spiritual meaning and perfection.

I will give him a white stone] I. It is supposed, that by the white stone is meant pardon, or acquittance, and the evidence of it; and that there is an allusion here to the custom observed by judges in ancient times, who were accustomed to give their suffrages by white and black pebbles: those who gave the former, were for absolving the culprit; those who gave the latter, were for his condemnation. This is mentioned by Ovid, Metam. lib. xv. ver. 41.

Mos erat antiquis, niveis atrisque lapillis,
His damnare reos, illis absolvere culpa.
Nunc quoque sic lata est sententia tristis:

"A custom was of old, and still remains,
Which life or death by suffrages ordains:
White stones and black within an urn are cast,
The first absolve, but fate is in the last."

DRYDEN.

II. Others suppose there is an allusion here to conquerors in the public games, who were not only conducted with great pomp into the city to which they belonged, but had a white stone given to them, with their name inscribed on it; which badge entitled them, during their whole life, to be maintained at the public expense.—See Pind. Olymp. vii. v. and the Scholia there: and see the collections in Wetstein, and Rosenmüller's note. These were called Tesseræ among the Romans; and of these there were several kinds.

1. Tesseræ conviviales, which answered exactly to our cards of invitation, or tickets of admission to a public feast or banquet; when the person invited produced his tessera, he was admitted. The mention of the hidden manna here may seem to intimate that there is a reference to these convivial tesseræ; whether given to the victor in the public games, entitling him to be fed at the public expense, or to a particular friend inviting him to a family meal, or to a public banquet.

2. There were tesseræ inscribed with different kinds of things, such as provisions, garments, gold or silver vessels, horses, mares, slaves, &c. These were sometimes thrown by the Roman emperors among the crowd in the theatres; and he that could, snatched one; and on producing it, he received that, the name of which was inscribed on it.—But from Dio Cassius it appears, that those tesseræ were small wooden balls, whereas the tesseræ, in general, were square, whence they had their name, as having four sides, angles, or corners. Illi τεσσαρην, vel τεσσαραν, vocabant, figuram quamvis quadratam, quæ quatuor angulos haberet:—and these were made of stone, marble, bone or ivory, lead, brass, or other metal.—See Pitiscus.

in the stone [a] a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

3. Tesseræ frumentariæ, or tickets to receive grain in the public distributions of corn; the name of the person who was to receive, and the quantum of grain, being both inscribed on this badge or ticket. Those who did not need this public provision for themselves, were permitted to sell their ticket; and the bearer was entitled to the quantum of grain mentioned on it.

4. But the most remarkable of these instruments were the tesseræ hospitales, which were given as badges of friendship and alliance; and on which some device was engraved, as a testimony that a contract of friendship had been made between the parties. A small oblong square piece of wood, bone, stone, or ivory, was taken and divided into two equal parts, on which each of the parties wrote his own name, and then interchanged it with the other. This was carefully preserved, and handed down even to posterity in the same family; and by producing this when they travelled, it gave a mutual claim to the bearers, of kind reception and hospitable entertainment at each other's houses.

It is to this custom that Plautus refers in his PŒNULUS, Act v. sc. 2. ver. 80. in the interview between Agorastocles and his unknown uncle Hanno:

AGORASTOCLES.— ——— Et tu edepol, quisquis es.
Et si quid opus est, quæso, dic; atque impera,
Popularitatis caussa.
HANNO.— ——— Habeo gratiam.
Verùm ego hîc hospitium habeo: Antidamæ filium
Quæro commonstra, si novisti, Agorastoclem.
Ecquem adolescentem tu hîc novisti Agorastoclem?
AGOR.—Siquidem tu Antidamæ hîc quæris adoptatitium,
Ego sum ipsus, quem tu quæris.
HAN.— ——— Hem! quid ego audio?
AGOR.—Antidamæ gnatum me esse.
HAN.— ——— si ita est, tesseram
Conferre, si vis hospitalem, eccam, adtuli.
AGOR.—Agedum huc ostende; est par probe: nam habeo domi.
HAN.—O mi hospes, salve multùm! nam mihi tuus pater,
Pater tuus ergo, hospes Antidamas fuit.
Hæc mihi hospitalis tessera cum illo fuit.
AGOR.—Ergo hîc apud me hospitium tibi præbebitur.
Nam haud repudio hospitium neque Carthaginem,
Inde sim oriundus.
HAN.— ——— Dii dent tibi omnes quæ velis.

Hanno.—Hail, my countryman!

Agorastocles.—I hail thee also, in the name of Pollux, whosoever thou art. And if thou have need of any thing, speak, I beseech thee, and thou shalt obtain what thou askest, for civility's sake.

Hanno.—I thank thee, but I have a lodging here; I seek the son of Antidamas. Tell me if thou knowest Agorastocles: dost thou know in this place the young Agorastocles?

Agorastocles.—If thou seek the adopted son of Antidamas, I am the person whom thou seekst.

Hanno.—Ha! What do I hear?

Agorastocles.—Thou hearest that I am the son of Antidamas.

Hanno.—If it be so, compare, if thou pleasest, the hospitable tessera: here it is, I have brought it with me.

Agorastocles.—Come then, reach it hither: it is the exact counterpart; I have the other at home.

Hanno.—O my friend, I am very glad to see thee, for thy father was my friend; therefore Antidamas thy father was my guest. I divided this hospitable tessera with him.

Agorastocles.—Therefore, a lodging shall be provided for thee with me; I reverence hospitality, and I love Carthage where I was born.

Hanno.—May all the gods grant thee whatsoever thou wishest!

The tessera, taken in this sense, seems to have been a kind of tally: and the two parts were compared together to ascertain the truth. Now, it is very probable that St. John may allude to this; for, on this mode of interpretation, every part of the verse is consistent. 1. The word ψηφος does not necessarily signify a stone of any kind, but a suffrage, sentence, decisive vote; and in this place seems answerable to the tessera. The tessera which Hanno had, he tells us, in his Punic language, was inscribed with the image or name of his god. "Sigillum hospitii mei est tabula sculpta, cujus sculptura est Deus meus." This is the interpretation of the Punic words at the beginning of the above 5th Act of the Pœnulus, as given by Bochart. 2. The person who held it had a right to entertainment in the house of him who originally gave it; for it was in reference to this that the friendly contract was made. 3. The names of the contracting persons, or some device, were written on the tessera, which commemorated the friendly contract: and as the parts were interchanged, none could know that name or device, or the reason of the contract, but he who received it. 4. This gave the bearer a right to the offices of hospitality, when produced; he was accom-like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass;

20 Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman [b] Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants [c] to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols.

modated with food, lodging, &c. as far as these were necessary; and to this the eating of the hidden manna may refer.

But what does this mean in the language of Christ?—1. That the person is taken into an intimate state of friendship with Him. 2. That this contract is witnessed to the party by some especial token, sign, or seal, to which he may have recourse to support his claim, and identify his person. This is probably what is elsewhere called the earnest of the Spirit: see the Note on Eph. i. 14. and the places there referred to. He then who has received, and retains the witness of the Spirit that he is adopted into the heavenly family, may humbly claim, in virtue of it, his support of the bread and water of life;—the hidden manna, every grace of the Spirit of God;—and the tree of life; immortality, or the final glorification of His body and soul throughout eternity. 3. By this state of grace into which he is brought, he acquires a new name, the name of child of God; the earnest of the Spirit, the tessera which he has received, shows him this new name. 4. And this name of child of God, no man can know or understand but he who has received the tessera, or Divine witness. 5. As his Friend and Redeemer may be found every where, because He fills the heavens and the earth, every where he may, on retaining this tessera, claim direction, succour, support, grace, and glory: and therefore the privileges of him who overcometh are the greatest and most glorious that can be imagined.

Verse 18. These things saith the Son of God] See the Notes on chap. i. 14, 15.

Verse 19. I know thy works] And of these he first sets forth their charity, την αγαπην, their love to God and each other; and particularly to the poor and distressed: and hence followed their faith, την πιστιν, their fidelity to the grace they had received; and service, την διακονιαν, and ministration; properly pious and benevolent service to widows, orphans, and the poor in general.

And thy patience] Την υπομονην σου, thy perseverance under afflictions and persecutions; and thy continuance in well-doing. I put faith before service, according to the general consent of the best MSS. and Versions.

Thy works] The continued labour of love, and thorough obedience.

The last to be more than the first] They not only retained what they had received at first, but grew in grace, and in the knowledge and love of Jesus Christ. This is a rare thing in most Christian churches; they generally lose the power of religion, and rest in the forms of worship; and it requires a powerful revival to bring them to such a state that their last works shall be more than their first.

Verse 20. That woman Jezebel] There is an allusion here to the history of Ahab and Jezebel, as given in 2 Kings ix. x. And although we do not know who this Jezebel was; yet, from the allusion, we may take it for granted she was a woman of power and influence in Thyatira, who corrupted the true religion, and harassed the followers of God in that city, as Jezebel did in Israel. Instead of that woman Jezebel, την γυναικα Ιεζαβηλ, many excellent MSS. and almost all the ancient Versions, read την γυναικα σου Ιεζαβηλ, THY WIFE Jezebel; which intimates, indeed asserts, that this bad woman was the wife of the bishop of the church; and his criminality in suffering her was therefore the greater. This reading Griesbach has received into the text. She called herself a prophetess, i. e. set up for a teacher; taught the Christians that fornication, and eating things offered to idols, were matters of no indifference, and thus they were seduced from the truth. The messenger, or bishop of this church, probably her husband, suffered this: he had power to have cast her and her party out of the church; or, as his wife, to have restrained her; but he did not do it, and thus she had every opportunity of seducing the faithful. This is what Christ had against the messenger of this church.

Verse 21. I gave her space to repent] "This alludes to the history of Jezebel. God first sent Elijah to Ahab to pronounce a severe judgment upon him; upon which Ahab showed tokens of repentance, and so God put off his punishment. By these means the like punishment pronounced against Jezebel was also put off. Thus God gave her time to repent, which she did not; but, instead of that, seduced her sons to the same sins: see 1 Kings xxi. 2, 3, 29. According to the Mosaical law, the punishment of idolatrous seducers was not to be delayed at all: but God sometimes showed mercy; and now much more under the Christian dispensation, though that mercy is often abused, and thus produces the contrary effect, as in the case of this Jezebel.—See Eccles. viii. 11.

Verse 22. Behold, I will cast her into a bed] "This again alludes to the same history. Ahaziah, son of Ahab and Jezebel, by his mother's ill instruction and example, followed her ways. God punished him by making him fall down, as is supposed, from the top of the terrace over his house, and so to be bedridden for a long time, under great anguish; designing thereby to give him time to repent; but when, instead of that, he sent to consult Baalzebub, Elijah was sent to pronounce a final doom against his impenitence. Thus the son of Jezebel, who had committed idolatry with and by her advice, was long cast into the bed of affliction, and not repenting, died: in the same manner his brother Jehoram succeeded likewise. All this while Jezebel had time and warning enough to repent; and though she did not prevail with Jehoram to continue in the idolatrous worship of Baal; yet she persisted in her own way, notwithstanding God's warnings. The sacred writer, therefore, here threatens the Gnostic Jezebel to make that wherein she delighteth, as adulterers in the bed of lust, to be the very place, occasion, and instrument, of her greatest torment. So in Isaiah, the bed is made a symbol of tribulation, and anguish of body and mind. See Isa. xxviii. 20. Job xxxiii. 19.

Verse 23. And I will kill her children with death] "That is, I will certainly destroy her offspring and memory, and thereby ruin her designs. Jezebel's two sons, being both kings, were both slain; and after that, all the seventy sons of Ahab; 2 Kings x. 1. in all which the hand of God was very visible. In the same manner God predicts the destruction of the heretics and heresies referred to.—See ver. 16. It should seem by the expression, I am he which searcheth the reins and the hearts, that these heretics lurked about, and sowed their pernicious doctrines secretly. But our Saviour tells them that it was in vain, for He had power to bring their deeds to light, having that Divine power of searching into the wills and affections of men; and hereby He would both show them and us that He is, according to His title, The Son of God; and hath such eyes to pry into their actions, that, like a fire, they will search into every thing, and burn up the chaff which cannot stand His trial: so that the depths of Satan, mentioned in the next verse, to which this alludes, (Christ assuming here this title purposely,) shall avail nothing to those who think, by their secret craft, to undermine the Christian religion: He will not only bring to light, but baffle, all their evil intentions. See chap. xvii. 9.

Verse 24. But unto you I say, and unto the rest] "But unto the rest, &c. This is the reading of the Complutensian, and seems preferable to the common one, as it evidently shows that the rest of the Epistle wholly concerns the faithful, who have not received the former doctrine of error. I will put upon you none other burden is a commendation of the sound part of the church; that they have no need of any new exhortation, or charge to be given them; no new advice, but to persevere as usual.—See Rom. xv. 14, 15. The expression of burden is taken from the history of Ahab, 2 Kings ix. 25. The Lord laid this burden on him; a word often used by the prophets to signify a prophecy threatening heavy things to be suffered.—See on Isaiah xiii. 1. and Numb. iv. 19."—See Dodd's Notes.

It is worthy of remark that the Gnostics called their doctrine the depths of God, and the depths of Bythos, intimating that they contained the most profound secrets of Divine wisdom. Christ here calls them the depths of Satan, being master-pieces of his subtlety. Perhaps they thought them to be of God, while all the time they were deceived by the devil.

Verse 25. That which ye have] That is, the pure doctrine of the gospel:—hold fast till I come; till I come to execute the judgments which I have threatened.

Verse 26. Power over the nations] Every witness of [a] my works unto the end, [b] to him will I give power over the nations:

27 [c] And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father.

28 And I will give him [d] the morning star.

29 [e] He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

[a] John 6. 29. 1 John 3. 23.——[b] Matt. 19. 28. Luke 22. 29, 30. 1 Cor. 6. 3. ch. 3. 21. & 20. 4.

Christ has power to confute and confound all the false doctrines and maxims of the nations of the world; for Christianity shall at last rule over all: the kingdom of Christ will come, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ.

Verse 27. He shall rule them with a rod of iron] He shall restrain vice by the strictest administration of justice: and those who finally despise the word, and rebel, shall be broken and destroyed, so as never more to be able to make head against the truth. This seems to refer to the Heathen world; and perhaps Constantine the Great may be intended, who, when he overcame Licinius, became the instrument in God's hand of destroying idolatry over the whole Roman empire; and it was so effectually broken as to be ever after like the fragments of an earthen vessel; of no use in themselves, and incapable of being ever united to any good purpose.

Verse 28. And I will give him the morning star] He shall have the brightest and most glorious empire, next to that of Christ Himself. And it is certain, that the Roman empire under Constantine the Great, was the brightest emblem of the latter day glory which has ever yet been exhibited to the world. It is well known that sun, moon, and stars, are emblems, in prophetic language, of empires, kingdoms, and states. And as the morning star is that which immediately precedes the rising of the sun, it probably here intends an empire which should usher in the universal sway of the kingdom of Christ.

Ever since the time of Constantine, the light of true religion has been increasingly diffused; and is shining more and more unto the perfect day.

Verse 29. He that hath an ear] Let every Christian pay the strictest regard to these predictions of Christ: and let them have a suitable influence on his heart and life.

Epistle to the Church of Sardis.

Verse 1. The seven Spirits of God] See the Note on ch. i. 4, 16, &c.

Thou hast a name that thou livest] Ye have the reputation of Christians, and consequently of being alive to God, through the quickening influence of the Divine Spirit. But ye are dead; ye have not the life of God in your souls: ye have not walked consistently and steadily before God, and His Spirit has been grieved with you; and he has withdrawn much of His light and power.

Verse 2. Be watchful] Ye have lost ground by carelessness and inattention. Awake, and keep awake!

I have not found thy works perfect before God.

3 [a] Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and [b] repent. [c] If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

4 Thou hast [d] a few names even in Sardis which have not [e] defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me [f] in white: for they are worthy.

5 He that overcometh, [g] the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not [h] blot out his name out of the [i] book of life, but [k] I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

Strengthen the things which remain] The convictions and good desires, with any measure of the fear of God; and of a tender conscience, which, although still subsisting, are about to perish; because the Holy Spirit, who is the Author of them, being repeatedly grieved, is about finally to depart.

Thy works perfect] Πεπληρωμενα, filled up. They performed duties of all kinds; but no duty completely. They were constantly beginning, but never brought any thing to a proper end. Their resolutions were languid, their strength feeble, and their light dim. They probably maintained their reputation before men; but their works were not perfect before God.

Verse 3. Remember] Enter into a serious consideration of your state.

How thou hast received] With what joy, zeal, and gladness, ye heard the gospel of Christ when first preached to you.

Hold fast] Those good desires and heavenly influences which still remain.

And repent] Be humbled before God, because ye have not been workers together with Him; but have received much of His grace in vain.

If therefore thou shalt not watch] If you do not consider your ways, watching against sin; and for opportunities to receive and do good;

I will come on thee as a thief] As the thief comes, when he is not expected; so will I come upon you, if ye be not watchful; and cut you off from life and hope.

Verse 4. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis] A few persons; names being put for those who bore them. And as the members of the church were all enrolled, or their names entered in a book, when admitted into the church, or when baptized, names are here put for the people themselves.—See ver. 5.

Have not defiled their garments] Their souls. The Hebrews considered holiness as the garb of the soul, and evil actions as stains or spots on this garb. So in Shabbath, fol. 152. 2. "A certain king gave royal garments to his servants: those who were prudent folded them up, and laid them by in a chest; those who were foolish put them on, and performed their daily labour in them. After some time, the king asked for those royal robes: the wise brought theirs white and clean; the foolish brought theirs spotted with dirt. With the former the king was well pleased; with the latter he was angry. Concerning the former he said, Let those garments be laid up in my wardrobe; and let the persons go home in peace. Of the latter he said, Let the garments be put into the hands of the fuller: and cast those who wore them into prison." This parable is spoken on these words of Ecclesiastes, ch. xii. 7. The spirit shall return to God who gave it.

They shall walk with me in white] They shall be raised to a state of eternal glory; and shall be for ever with their Lord.

Verse 5. I will not blot out his name] This may be an allusion to the custom of registering the names of those who were admitted into the church, in a book kept for that purpose; from which custom our baptismal registers in churches are derived. These are properly books of life, as there, those who were born unto God were registered: as in the latter, those who were born in that parish were enrolled. Or, there may be allusions to the white raiment worn by the priests; and the erasing of the name of any priest out of the sacerdotal list, who had either sinned, or was found not to be of the seed of Aaron. In Middoth, fol. 37. 2. "The great council of Israel sat and judged the priests. If in a priest any vice was found, they stripped off his white garments, and clothed him in black; in which he wrapped himself, went out, and departed. Him in whom no vice was found, they clothed in white; and he went and took his part in the ministry, among his brother priests."

I will confess his name] I will acknowledge that this person is My true disciple, and a member of My mystical body. In all this there may also be an allusion to the custom of registering citizens. Their names were entered into books, according to their condition, tribes, family, &c. and when dead, or had by unconstitutional acts forfeited their right of citizenship, the name was blotted out, or erased from the registers.—See the Note on Exod. xxxii. 32.

Verse 6. He that hath an ear] The usual caution and counsel carefully to attend to the things spoken to the members of that church; in which every Reader is more or less interested.

Epistle to the Church of Philadelphia.

Verse 7. He that is holy] In whom holiness essentially dwells; and from whom all holiness is derived.

He that is true] He who is the Fountain of truth; who cannot lie, nor be imposed on. From whom all truth proceeds; and whose veracity in His Revelation is unimpeachable.

He that hath the key of David] See this metaphor explained, Matt. xvi. 19. Key is the emblem of authority and knowledge; the key of David, is the regal right or authority of David. David could shut or open the kingdom of Israel to whom he pleased. He was not bound to leave the kingdom, even to his eldest son. He could choose whom he pleased to succeed him. The kingdom of the gospel, and the kingdom of heaven, are at the disposal of Christ. He can shut against whom He will: He can open to whom he pleases. If He shuts, no man can open: if He opens, no man can shut. His determinations all stand fast: and none can reverse them. This expression is an allusion to Isa. xxii. 22. where the prophet promises to Eliakim, under the symbol of the key of the house of David the government of the whole nation; i. e. all the power of the king, to be executed by him as his deputy: but the words, as here applied to Christ, show that He is absolute.

Verse 8. I have set before thee an open door] I have opened to thee a door to proclaim and diffuse My word; and, notwithstanding there are many adversaries to the spread of My gospel, yet none of them shall be able to prevent it.

Thou hast a little strength] Very little political authority or influence;—yet thou hast kept my word; hast kept the true doctrine—and hast not denied my name by taking shelter in heathenism, when Christianity was persecuted. The little strength may refer either to the smallness of the numbers, or to the littleness of their grace.

Verse 9. I will make them] Show them to be of the synagogue of Satan, who say they are Jews, pretending thereby to be of the synagogue of God, and consequently His true and peculiar children.

I will make them to come and worship] I will so dispose of matters in the course of my Providence, that the Jews shall be obliged to seek unto the Christians for toleration, support, and protection; which they shall be obliged to sue for in the most humble and abject manner.

To know that I have loved thee.] That the love which was formely fixed on the Jews, is now removed, and transferred to the Gentiles.

Verse 10. The word of my patience] The doctrine which has exposed you to so much trouble and persecution; and required so much patience and magnanimity to bear up under its attendant trials.

The hour of temptation] A time of sore and peculiar trial, which might have proved too much for their strength. He who is faithful to the grace of God, is often hidden from trials and difficulties, which fall without mitigation on those who have been unfaithful in his covenant. Many understand by the hour of temptation, the persecution under Trajan, which was greater and more extensive than the preceding ones under Nero and Domitian.

To try them] That is, such persecutions will be the means of trying and proving those who profess Christianity; and showing who were sound and thorough Christians, and who were not.

Verse 11. Behold, I come quickly] These things will which thou hast, that no man take [a] thy crown.

12 Him that overcometh will I make [b] a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and [c] I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is [d] new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: [e] and I will write upon him my new name.

13 [f] He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

14 And unto the angel of the church [g] of the Laodiceans write; [h] These things saith the Amen, [i] the faithful and true witness, [k] the beginning of the creation of God; shortly take place; and I am coming with my consolations and rewards to my faithful followers; and with judgments to my adversaries.

Take thy crown] God has provided mansions for you: let none through your fall, occupy those seats of blessedness.

Verse 12. A pillar in the temple] There is probably an allusion here to the two pillars in the temple of Jerusalem, called Jachin and Boaz, stability and strength. The church is the temple: CHRIST is the foundation on which it is built: and His ministers are the PILLARS, by which, under Him, it is adorned and supported. St. Paul has the same allusions, Gal. ii. 9.

I will write upon him the name of my God] That is, I will make him a priest unto myself. The priest had written on his forehead קודש ליהוה kodesh layhovah; "Holiness to the Lord."

And the name of the city of my God] As the high priest had on his breastplate the names of the twelve tribes engraved, and these constituted the city, or church of God; Christ here promises, that in place of them the twelve apostles, representing the Christian church, shall be written, which is called the New Jerusalem: and which God has adopted in place of the twelve Jewish tribes.

My new name] The Saviour of ALL; the light that lightens the GENTILES. The CHRIST, The anointed One; the only GOVERNOR of His church, and the Redeemer of ALL mankind.

There is here an intimation that the Christian church is to endure for ever; and the Christian ministry to last as long as time endures. He shall go no more out for ever.

Epistle to the Church of the Laodiceans.

Verse 14. These things saith the Amen.] That is, He who is true, or faithful: from אמן aman, he was true; immediately interpreted, the faithful and true Witness.—See ch. i. 5.

The beginning of the creation of God] That is, the Head and Governor of all creatures: the King of the creation.—See on Coloss. i. 15. By His titles here He prepares them for the humiliating and awful truths which He was about to declare; and the authority on which the declaration was founded.

Verse 15. Thou art neither cold nor hot] Ye are neither Heathens nor Christians; neither good nor evil; neither led away by false doctrine, nor thoroughly addicted to that which is true. In a word, they were listless and indifferent; and seemed to care little whether Heathenism or Christianity prevailed. Though they felt little zeal either for the salvation of their own souls, or that of others, yet they had such a general conviction of the truth and importance of Christianity, that they could not readily give it up.

I would thou wert cold or hot.] That is, ye should be decided: adopt some part or other, and be in earnest in your attachment to it. If ever the words of Mr. Erskine, in his Gospel Sonnets, were true, they were true of this church:

> "To good and evil equal bent:
> "I'm both a devil and a saint."

They were too good to go to hell: too bad to go to heaven. Like Ephraim and Judah, Hos. vi. 4. O Ephraim, what shall I do unto thee? O Judah, what shall I do unto thee? for your goodness is as a morning cloud; and, as the early dew, it passeth away. They had good dispositions, which were captivated by evil ones. And they had evil dispositions, which, in their turn, yielded to those that were good: and the Divine justice and mercy seem puzzled to know what to do to or with them. This was the state of the Laodicean church; and our Lord expresses here in this apparent wish, the same that is expressed by Epictetus, Ench. ch. 36. ἑνα σε δει ανθρωπον, η αγαθον η κακον ειναι. "Thou oughtest to be one kind of man: either a good man, or a bad man."

16 So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.

17 Because thou sayest, [a] I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked:

18 I counsel thee [b] to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and [c] white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

19 [d] As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent.

20 Behold, [e] I stand at the door, and knock: [f] if any man hear my voice, and open the door,

[a] Hos. 12. 8. 1 Cor. 4. 8.—[b] Isa. 55. 1. Matt. 13. 44. & 25. 9.—[c] 2 Cor. 5. 3. ch. 7. 13. & 16. 15. & 19. 8.

[d] Job 5. 17. Prov. 3. 11, 12. Heb. 12. 5, 6. Jam. 1. 12.—[e] Cant. 5. 2. [f] Luke 12. 37.

Verse 16. Because thou art lukewarm] Irresolute and undecided.

I will spue thee out of my mouth.] He alludes here to the known effect of tepid water upon the stomach; it generally produces a nausea. I will cast thee off. Thou shalt have no interest in me. Though thou hast been near to my heart, yet now I must pluck thee thence, because slothful, careless, and indolent. Thou art not in earnest for thy soul.

Verse 17. I am rich] Thou supposest thyself to be in a safe state; perfectly sure of final salvation, because thou hast begun well, and laid the right foundation. It was this most deceitful conviction that cut the nerves of their spiritual diligence: they rested in what they had already received; and seemed to think that once in grace, must be still in grace.

Thou art wretched] Ταλαιπωρος, most wretched. "The word signifies," according to Mintest, "being worn out and fatigued with grievous labours, as they who labour in a stone quarry, or are condemned to the mines." So, instead of being children of God, as they supposed, and infallible heirs of the kingdom, they were, in the sight of God, in the condition of the most abject slaves.

And miserable] Ὁ ελεεινος, most deplorable; to be pitied by all men.

And poor] Having no spiritual riches; no holiness of heart. Rich and poor, are sometimes used by the rabbins to express the righteous and the wicked.

And blind] The eyes of the understanding being darkened, so that thou dost not see thy state.

And naked] Without the image of God; not clothed with holiness and purity. A more deplorable state, in spiritual things, can scarcely be imagined than that of this church. And it is the true picture of many churches, and of innumerable individuals.

Verse 18. I counsel thee] O fallen and deceived soul, hear Jesus! Thy case is not hopeless:—buy of me.

Gold tried in the fire] Come, and receive from me, without money and without price, faith that shall stand in every trial: so gold tried in the fire is here understood. But it may mean pure and undefiled religion; or that grace or Divine influence which produces it; which is more valuable to the soul than the purest gold to the body. They had before imaginary riches; this alone can make them truly rich.

White raiment] Holiness of heart and life.

Anoint thine eyes] Pray for, that ye may receive, the enlightening influences of my Spirit; that ye may be convinced of your true state, and see where your help lies.

Verse 19. As many as I love] So it was the love He still had to them that induced Him thus to reprehend, and thus to counsel them.

Be zealous] Be in earnest to get your souls saved. They had no zeal; this was their bane. He now stirs them up to diligence in the use of the means of grace; and repentance for their past sins and remissness.

Verse 20. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock] There are many sayings of this kind among the ancient rabbins: thus in Shir Hashirim Rabba, fol. 25. 1. "God said to the Israelites, My children, open to me one door of repentance, even so wide as the eye of a needle; and I will open to you doors through which calves and horned cattle may pass."

In Sohar Levit. fol. 8. col. 32. it is said, "If a man conceal his sin, and do not open it before the Holy King, although he ask mercy, yet the door of repentance shall not be opened to him. But if he open it before the holy blessed God, God spares him, and mercy prevails over wrath: and when he laments, although all the doors were shut, yet they shall be opened to him, and his prayer shall be heard."

Christ stands, waits long, at the door of the sinner's heart; He knocks, uses judgments, mercies, reproofs, exhortations, &c. to induce sinners to repent and turn to Him. He lifts up His voice, calls loudly by His word, ministers, and Spirit.

If any man hear] If the sinner will seriously consider his state, and attend to the voice of his Lord:—

And open the door] This must be his own act, receiving power for this purpose from his offended Lord, who will not break open the door: He will make no forcible entry.

I will come in to him] I will manifest myself to him;

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

[a] I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

21 To him that overcometh [b] will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.

22 [c] He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

[a] John 14. 23.——[b] Matt. 19. 28. Luke 22. 30.

heal all his backslidings, pardon all his iniquities, and love him freely.

Will sup with him] Hold communion with him; feed him with the bread of life.

And he with me] I will bring him at last to dwell with Me in everlasting glory.

Verse 21. To sit with me in my throne] In every case it is to him that overcometh, to the conqueror, that the final promise is made. He that conquers not, is not crowned; therefore, every promise is here made to him that is faithful unto death. Here is a most remarkable expression; Jesus has conquered, and is sat down with the FATHER upon the Father's throne. He who conquers through Christ, sits down with Christ upon His throne: but Christ's throne, and the throne of the Father, is the same; and it is on this same throne that those who are faithful unto death are finally to sit! How astonishing is this state of exaltation! The dignity and grandeur of it, who can conceive!

This is the worst of the seven churches, and yet the most eminent of all the promises is made to it; showing that the worst may repent, finally conquer, and attain even to the highest state of glory.

Verse 22. He that hath an ear let him hear] Mr. Wesley has a very judicious note on the conclusion of this chapter, and particularly on this last verse:—He that hath an ear, &c. "This (counsel) stands in three former letters before the promise; in the four latter, after it; clearly dividing the seven into two parts, the first containing three, the last four letters. The titles given our Lord in the three former letters peculiarly respect His power after His resurrection and ascension, particularly over his church; those in the four latter His Divine glory and unity with the Father and the Holy Spirit. Again, this word, being placed before the promises in the three former letters, excludes the false apostles at Ephesus, the false Jews at Smyrna, and the partakers with the heathens at Pergamos, from having any share therein. In the four latter, being placed after them, it leaves the promises immediately joined with Christ's address to the angel of the church, to show that the fulfilling of these was near; whereas the others reach beyond the end of the world. It should be observed that the overcoming, or victory, (to which alone these peculiar promises are annexed,) is not the ordinary victory obtained by every believer, but a special victory obtained over great and peculiar temptations, by those that are strong in faith."

The latest account we have of the state of the seven Asiatic churches, is in a letter from the Rev. David Lindsay, chaplain to the British embassy at Constantinople, to a member of the British and Foreign Bible Society, by which society Mr. Lindsay had been solicited to distribute some copies of the New Testament, in modern Greek, among the Christians in Asia Minor. The following is his communication, dated—

Constantinople, January 10, 1816.

"When I last wrote to you, I was on the point of setting out on a short excursion into Asia Minor. Travelling hastily, as I was constrained to do, from the circumstances of my situation, the information I could procure was necessarily superficial and unsatisfactory. As, however, I distributed the few books of the society which I was able to carry with me, I think it necessary to give some account of the course I took:—

"1. The regular intercourse of England with SMYRNA, will enable you to procure as accurate intelligence of its present state as any I can pretend to offer. From the conversations I had with the Greek bishop and his clergy, as well as various well-informed individuals, I am led to suppose, that if the population of Smyrna be estimated at one hundred and forty thousand inhabitants, there are from fifteen to twenty thousand Greeks, six thousand Armenians, five thousand Catholics, one hundred and forty Protestants, and eleven thousand Jews.

"2. After Smyrna, the first place I visited was EPHESUS, or rather (as the site is not quite the same) Aiasalick, which consists of about fifteen poor cottages. I found there but three Christians, two brothers who keep a small shop, and a gardener. They are all three Greeks, and their ignorance is lamentable indeed. In that place, which was blessed so long with an apostle's labours, and those of his zealous assistants, are Christians who have not so much as heard of that apostle; or seem only to recognize the name of Paul as one in the calender of their saints. One of them I found able to read a little; and left with him the New Testament, in ancient and modern Greek, which he expressed a strong desire to read, and promised me he would not only study it himself, but lend it to his friends in the neighbouring villages.

"3. My next object was to see LAODICEA: in the road to this is Guzel-hisar, a large town, with one church, and about seven hundred Christians. In conversing with the priests here, I found them so little acquainted with the Bible, or even the New Testament, in an entire form, that they had no distinct knowledge of the books it contained, beyond the four gospels; but mentioned them indiscriminately, with various idle legends and lives of saints. I have sent thither three copies of the modern Greek Testament since my return. About three miles from Laodicea is Denizli, which has been styled (but I am inclined to think erroneously) the Ancient Colosse; it is a considerable town, with about four hundred Christians, Greeks and Armenians, each of whom has a church. I regret, however, to say, that here also the most extravagant tales of miracles, and fabulous accounts of angels, saints, and relics, had so usurped the place of the Scriptures, as to render it very difficult to separate, in their minds, Divine truths from human inventions. I felt that here that unhappy time was come when men should 'turn away their ears from the truth, and be turned unto fables.' I had with me some copies of the gospels in ancient Greek, which I distributed here, as in some other places through which I had passed. Eski-hisar, close to which are the remains of ancient Laodicea, contains about fifty poor inhabitants, in which number are but two Christians, who live together in a small mill: unhappily, neither could read at all; the copy, therefore, of the New Testament, which I intended for this church, I left with that of Denizli, the offspring and poor remains of Laodicea and Colosse. The prayers of the Mosque are the only prayers which are heard near the ruins of Laodicea, on which the threat seems to have been fully executed, in its utter rejection as a church.

"4. I left it for PHILADELPHIA, now Alah-shehr. It was gratifying to find at last some surviving fruits of early zeal; and here, at least, whatever may be the loss of the spirit of Christianity, there is still the form of a Christian church; this has been kept from the hour of temptation, which came upon all the Christian world. There are here about one thousand Christians, chiefly Greeks, who, for the most part, speak only Turkish; there are twenty-five places of public worship, five of which are large regular churches; to these there is a resident bishop, with twenty inferior clergy.—A copy of the modern Greek Testament was received by the bishop with great thankfulness.

5. "I quitted Alah-shehr, deeply disappointed at the statement I received there of the church of SARDIS. I trusted that, in its utmost trials, it would not have been suffered to perish utterly; and I heard, with surprise, that not a vestige of it remained. With what satisfaction then did I find, on the plains of Sardis, a small church establishment: the few Christians who dwell around modern Sart were anxious to settle there, and erect a church, as they were in the habit of meeting at each other's houses for the exercise of religion. From this design they were prohibited by Kar 'Osman Oglu, the Turkish governor of the district; and, in consequence, about five years ago, they built a church upon the plain, within view of ancient Sardis; and there they maintain a priest. The place has gradually risen into a little village, now called Tatar-keny; thither the few Christians of Sart, who amount to seven, and those in its immediate vicinity, resort for public worship, and form together a congregation of about forty. There appears then still a remnant, 'a few names even in Sardis,' which have been preserved. I cannot repeat the expressions of gratitude with which they received a copy of the New Testament, in a language with which they were familiar. Several crowded about the priest to hear it on the spot, and I left them thus engaged.

"6. Ak-hisar, the ancient THYATIRA, is said to contain about thirty thousand inhabitants, of whom three thousand are Christians, all Greeks, except about two hundred Armenians. There is, however, but one Greek church, and one Armenian. The superior of the Greek church, to whom I presented the Romaic Testament, esteemed it so great a treasure, that he earnestly pressed me, if possible, to spare another, that one might be secured to the church, and free from accidents, while the other went round among the people for their private reading. I have, therefore, since my return hither, sent him four copies.

"7. The church of PERGAMOS, in respect to numbers, may be said to flourish still in Bergamo. The town is less than Ak-hisar, but the number of Christians is about as great, the proportion of Armenians to Greeks nearly the same, and each nation also has one church. The bishop of the district, who occasionally resides there, was at that time absent; and I experienced, with deep regret, that the resident clergy were totally incapable of estimating the gift I intended them; I therefore delivered the Testament to the lay vicar of the bishop, at his urgent request, he having assured me that the bishop would highly prize so valuable an acquisition to the church. He seemed much pleased that the benighted state of his nation had excited the attention of strangers.

"Thus, Sir, I have left, at least one copy of the unadulterated word of God, at each of the seven Asiatic churches of the Apocalypse; and I trust they are not utterly thrown away: but, whoever may plant, it is God only who can give the increase; and from His goodness we may hope they will, in due time, bring forth fruit, 'some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold!'

"HENRY LINDSAY."

In my Note on Acts xix. 24. I have given an account of the celebrated temple of Diana, at Ephesus, to which building, called one of the seven wonders of the world, St. Paul is supposed to allude, in his Epistle to this church, particularly at ch. iii. 18. where I have again given the measurement of this temple; and where the compositor has interchanged two figures. Instead of "107 pillars," in the latter Note read "127;" and instead of "250 years," read "220 years."

CHAPTER IV.

John sees the Throne of God in heaven surrounded by twenty-four elders; and four living creatures, full of eyes; which all join in giving glory to the Almighty, 1—11.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

AFTER this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and [a] the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, [b] Come up hither, [c] and I will show thee things which must be hereafter.

2 And immediately [d] I was in the spirit: and, behold, [e] a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne.

3 And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone; [f] and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald.

4 [g] And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, [h] clothed in white raiment; [i] and they had on their heads crowns of gold.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

5 And out of the throne proceeded [k] lightnings and thunderings and voices: [l] and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are [m] the seven Spirits of God.

6 And before the throne there was [n] a sea of glass like unto crystal: [o] and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before [p] and behind.

7 [q] And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. A door was opened in heaven] This appears to have been a visible aperture in the sky over his head.

Verse 2. I was in the Spirit] Rapt up in an ecstasy.

Verse 3. And he that sat] There is here no description of the Divine Being, so as to point out any similitude, shape, or dimensions. The description rather aims to point out the surrounding glory and effulgence, than the Person of the Almighty King.—See a similar description Numb. xxiv. 10, &c. and the Notes there.

Verse 4. Four and twenty elders] Perhaps this is in reference to the smaller Sanhedrin at Jerusalem, which was composed of twenty-three elders; or to the princes of the twenty-four courses of the Jewish priests, which ministered at the tabernacle and the temple; at first appointed by David.

Clothed in white raiment] The garments of the priests.

On their heads crowns of gold.] An emblem of their dignity. The Jewish writers represent human souls as being created first; and before they enter the body, each is taken by an angel into Paradise, where it sees the righteous sitting in glory with crowns upon their heads.—Rab. Tanchum. fol. 39. 4.

Verse 5. Seven lamps of fire] Seven angels, the attendants and ministers of the Supreme King.—See chap. i. 4. and the Note there.

Verse 6. Four beasts] Τεσσαρα ζωα, four living creatures, or four animals. The word beast is very improperly used here, and elsewhere, in this description: Wiclif first used it; and translators in general have followed him in this uncouth rendering. A beast before the throne of God in heaven, sounds oddly.

Verse 7. The first beast was like a lion] It is supposed that there is a reference here to the four standards, or ensigns, of the four divisions of the tribes in the Israelitish camp, as they are described by Jewish writers.

The first living creature was like a lion: this was, say the rabbins, the standard of JUDAH on the East, with the two tribes of Issachar and Zabulon. The second, like a calf, or ox, which was the emblem of EPHRAIM, who pitched on the West, with the two tribes of Manasseh and Benjamin. The third, with the face of a man, which, according to the rabbins, was the standard of REUBEN, who pitched on the South, with the two tribes of Simeon and Gad. The fourth, which was like a flying (spread) eagle, was, according to the same writers, the emblem on the ensign of DAN, who pitched on the North, with the two tribes of Asher and Naphtali. This traditionary description agrees with the four faces of a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle.

8 And the four beasts had each of them [a] six wings about him; and they were full of eyes [b] within: and [c] they rest not day and night, saying, [d] Holy, holy, holy, [e] Lord God Almighty, [f] which was, and is, and is to come.

9 And when those beasts give glory and honour and thanks to him that sat on the throne, [g] who liveth for ever and ever,

10 [h] The four and twenty elders fall down before him that sat on the throne, [i] and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, [k] and cast their crowns before the throne, saying, the cherub in Ezekiel's vision.—See my Notes and Diagrams on Numb. ii.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

Christian tradition has given these creatures as emblems of the four evangelists. To John is attributed the EAGLE; to Luke, the OX; to Mark, the LION; and to Matthew, the MAN, or angel in human form. As the former represented the whole Jewish church, or congregation; so the latter is intended to represent the whole Christian church.

Verse 8. The four beasts had each of them six wings] I have already observed, in the Preface to this Book, that the phraseology is rabbinical; I might have added, and the imagery also. We have almost a counterpart of this description in Pirkey Elieser, chap. 4. I shall give the substance of this from Schoettgen. "Four troops of ministering angels praise the holy blessed God; the first is Michael, at the right hand; the next is Gabriel, at the left; the third is Uriel, before; and the fourth is Raphael, behind Him. The Shechina of the Holy Blessed God is in the midst, and He Himself sits upon a throne high and elevated, hanging in the air; and His magnificence as amber, חשמל (chashmel,) in the midst of the fire.—Ezek. i. 4. On His head is placed a crown, and a diadem, with the incommunicable name (יהוה Yehovah) inscribed on the front of it. His eyes go throughout the whole earth; a part of them is fire, and a part of them hail. At His right hand stands Life, and at His left hand Death; and He has a fiery sceptre in His hand. Before Him is the veil spread, that veil which is between the temple and the holy of holies; and seven angels minister before Him, within that veil: the veil and His footstool are like fire and lightning; and under the throne of glory there is a shining like fire and sapphire, and about His throne are justice and judgment.

"The place of the throne are the seven clouds of glory; and the chariot-wheels, and the cherub, and the living creatures, which give glory before His face. The Throne is in similitude like sapphire; and at the four feet of it are four living creatures, each of which has four faces, and four wings. When God speaks from the East, then it is from between the two cherubim, with the face of A MAN; when He speaks from the South, then it is from between the two cherubim, with the face of a LION; when from the West, then it is from between the two cherubim, with the face of an OX; and when from the North, then it is from between the two cherubim, with the face of an EAGLE.

"And the living creatures stand before the throne of glory; and they stand in fear, in trembling, in horror, and in great agitation; and from this agitation a stream of fire flows before them. Of the two seraphim one stands at the right hand of the Holy Blessed God, and one stands at the left, and each has six wings; with two they cover their face, lest they should see the face of shechina; with two they cover their feet, lest they should find out the footstool of the shechina; and with two they fly, and sanctify His great Name. And they answer each other, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts; the whole earth is full of His glory. And the living creatures stand near His glory, yet they do not know the place of His glory: but wheresoever His glory is, they cry out, and say, Blessed be the glory of the Lord in his place."

In Shemoth Rabba, sec. 23. fol. 122. 4. Rabbi Abin says, "There are four which have principality in this world: among intellectual creatures, MAN; among birds, the EAGLE; among cattle, the OX; and among wild beasts, the LION; each of these has a kingdom, and a certain magnificence; and they are placed under the throne of glory, Ezek. i. 10. to show that no creature is to exalt itself in this world; and that the kingdom of God is over all." These creatures may be considered the representatives of the whole creation.

Verse 10. Cast their crowns before the throne] Acknowledge the infinite supremacy of God; and that they have derived their being and their blessings from Him alone. This is an allusion to the custom of prostrations in the East; and to the homage of petty kings, acknowledging the supremacy of the emperor.

Verse 11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive] Thus all creation acknowledges the supremacy of God: and we learn from this song that He made all things for his pleasure; and through the same motive, He preserves. Hence, it is most evident, that He hateth nothing that He has made; and could have made no intelligent creature with the design to make it eternally miserable. It is strange that a contrary supposition has ever entered into the heart of man: and it is high time that the benevolent nature of the Supreme God should be fully vindicated from aspersions of this kind.

CHAPTER V.

The Book sealed with seven seals, which no being in heaven or earth could open, 1—3. Is at last opened by the Lion of the tribe of Judah, 4—8. He receives the praises of the four living creatures, and the twenty-four elders, 9, 10. And afterward of an innumerable multitude, who acknowledge that they were redeemed to God by His blood, 11, 12. And then, of the whole creation, who ascribe blessing, honour, glory, and power, to God and the Lamb for ever, 13, 14.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. A book written within and on the backside] That is, the book was full of solemn contents within, but it was sealed: and on the backside was a superscription, indicating its contents. It was a labelled book, or one written on each side of the skin, which was not usual.

Sealed with seven seals] As seven is a number of perfection, it may mean that the book was so sealed, that the seals could neither be counterfeited nor broken; i. e. the matter of the book was so obscure and enigmatical, and the work it enjoined, and the facts it predicted, so difficult and stupendous, that they could neither be known nor performed by human wisdom or power.

Verse 2. A strong angel] One of the chief of the angelic host.

Proclaiming] As the herald of God.

To open the book, and to loose the seals] To loose the seals, that he may open the book. Who can tell what this book contains? Who can open its mysteries? The book may mean the purposes and designs of God relative to His government of the world and the church; but we, whose habitation is in the dust, know nothing of such things.

Verse 3. And no man] Οὐδεὶς, no person or being.

In heaven] Among all the angels of God.

Nor in the earth] No human being.

Neither under the earth] No disembodied spirit, nor any demon. Neither angels, men, nor devils, can fathom the decrees of God.

Neither to look thereon.] None can look into it, unless it be opened; and none can open it, unless the seals be unloosed.

Verse 4. I wept much] Because the world and the church were likely to be deprived of the knowledge of the contents of the book.

Verse 5. The Lion of the tribe of Juda] Jesus Christ, who sprang from this tribe, as His genealogy proves; see on Matt. i. and Luke iii. There is an allusion here to Gen. xlix. 9. Judah is a lion's whelp: the lion was the emblem of this tribe; and was supposed to have been embroidered on its ensigns.

book, and [a] to loose the seven seals thereof.

6 And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood [b] a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and [c] seven eyes, which are [d] the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.

7 And he came and took the book out of the right hand [e] of him that sat upon the throne.

8 And when he had taken the book [f] the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them [g] harps, and golden vials full of [h] odours, [i] which are the prayers of saints.

9 And [k] they sung a new song, saying, [l] Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; [m] for thou wast slain, and [n] hast redeemed us to God by thy blood [o] out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;

The Root of David] See Isa. xi. 1. Christ was the root of David, as to His Divine nature; He was a branch out of the stem of Jesse, as to His human nature.

Hath prevailed] By the merit of His incarnation, passion, and death.

To open the book] To explain and execute all the purposes and decrees of God, in relation to the government of the world and the church.

Verse 6. Stood a Lamb] Christ, so called because He was a sacrificial offering: ἀρνιον, signifies a little or delicate lamb.

As it had been slain] As if now in the act of being offered. This is very remarkable; so important is the sacrificial offering of Christ, in the sight of God, that He is still represented as being in the very act of pouring out His blood for the offences of man. This gives great advantage to faith: when any soul comes to the Throne of Grace, he finds a Sacrifice there provided for him to offer to God. Thus all succeeding generations find they have the continual Sacrifice ready; and the newly-shed blood to offer.

Seven horns] As horn is the emblem of power, and seven the number of perfection, the seven horns may denote the all-prevailing and infinite might of Jesus Christ. He can support all His friends; He can destroy all His enemies; and He can save to the uttermost all that come unto God through Him.

Seven eyes] To denote His infinite knowledge and wisdom: but as these seven eyes are said to be the seven spirits of God, they seem to denote rather His Providence, in which He often employs the ministry of angels; therefore, these are said to be sent forth into all the earth.—See on chap. i. 4.

Verse 7. He came and took the book] This verse may be properly explained by John, ch. i. 18. No man hath seen God at any time: the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath DECLARED him. With Jesus alone, are all the counsels and mysteries of God.

Verse 8. The four beasts—fell down before the Lamb] The whole church of God, and all His children in heaven and earth, acknowledge that Jesus Christ is alone worthy and able to unfold and execute all the mysteries and counsels of God. See on verse 9.

Having every one of them harps] There were harps and vials; and each of the elders and living creatures had one.

Odours, which are the prayers of saints.] The frankincense and odours offered at the tabernacle were emblems of the prayers and praises of the Lord. That prayers are compared to incense, see Psa. cxli. 2. Let my PRAYER be set forth before thee as INCENSE. Hence that saying in Synopsis Sohar, p. 44. n. 37. "The odour of the prayers of the Israelites is equal to myrrh and frankincense: but on the sabbath it is preferred to the scent of all kinds of perfumes." The words, which are the prayers of saints, are to be understood as this is my body; this signifies or represents my body: these odours represent the prayers of the saints.

Verse 9. A new song] Composed on the matters and blessings of the gospel, which was just now opened on earth. But new song may signify a most excellent song; and by this, the gospel and its blessings are probably signified. The gospel is called a new song, Psa. xcvi. 1. And perhaps there is an allusion in the harps here, to Psa. cxliv. 9. I will sing a NEW SONG unto thee, O God, upon a PSALTERY, and an INSTRUMENT of TEN STRINGS, &c. The same form of speech is found, Isa. xlii. 10. Sing unto the Lord a NEW SONG, &c. and there the prophet seems to have the gospel dispensation particularly in view.

Thou—hast redeemed us to God—out of every—nation]

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

10 [a] And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

11 And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels [b] round about the throne and the beasts and the elders; and the number of them was [c] ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands;

12 Saying with a loud voice, [d] Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

13 And [e] every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, [f] Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him [g] that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

14 [h] And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him [i] that liveth for ever and ever.

[a] Exod. 19. 6. 1 Pet. 2. 5, 9. ch. 1. 6. & 20. 6. & 22. 5.——[b] Ch. 4. 4, 6.——[c] Psa. 68. 17. Dan. 7. 10. Heb. 12. 22.——[d] Ch. 4. 11.——[e] Phil. 2. 10. ver. 3.

[f] 1 Chron. 29. 11. Rom. 9. 5. & 16. 27. 1 Tim. 6. 16. 1 Pet. 4. 11. & 5. 11. ch. 1. 16.——[g] Ch. 6. 16. & 7. 10.——[h] Ch. 19. 4.——[i] Ch. 4. 9, 10.

It appears therefore, that the living creatures and the elders represent the aggregate of the followers of God; or the Christian Church in all nations, and among all kinds of people; and perhaps through the whole compass of time: and all these are said to be redeemed by Christ's blood; plainly showing that His life was a sacrificial offering for the sins of mankind.

Verse 10. Kings and priests] See Exod. xix. 6. 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9. and the notes there.

Verse 11. The voice of many angels] These also are represented as joining in the chorus with redeemed mortals.

Ten thousand times ten thousand] "Myriads of myriads, and chiliads of chiliads;" that is, an infinite or innumerable multitude. This is in reference to Dan. vii. 10.

Verse 12. To receive power] That is, Jesus Christ is worthy to take, λαβειν, to have ascribed to Him, power, omnipotence; riches, beneficence; wisdom, omniscience; strength, power in prevalent exercise; honour, the highest reputation for what He has done; glory, the praise due to such actions; and blessing, the thankful acknowledgments of the whole creation. Here are seven different species of praise: and this is exactly agreeable to the Rabbinical forms, which the author of this book keeps constantly in view.—See Sepher Rasiel, fol. 39. 2. "To thee belongs, כבוד kebod, glory; גדולה gedolah, magnitude; גבורה geburah, might; המלכה hammalekah, the kingdom; התפארת hatephaareth, the honour; הנצח hanetsach, the victory; והוד vehahod, and the praise.

Verse 13. Every creature] All parts of the creation, animate and inanimate, are represented here by that figure of speech called prosopopœia, or personification, as giving praise to the Lord Jesus; because by Him all things were created. We find the whole creation gives precisely the same praise, and in the same terms, to Jesus Christ, who is undoubtedly meant here by the Lamb just slain, as they give to God who sits upon the throne. Now if Jesus Christ were not properly God, this would be idolatry; as it would be giving to the creature what belongs to the Creator.

Verse 14. The four beasts said, Amen.] Acknowledged that what was attributed to Christ was His due.

The four and twenty elders] The word εικοσιτεσσαρες, twenty-four, is wanting in the most eminent MSS. and Versions.

Fell down and worshipped] Επεσαν και προσεκυνησαν, fell down on their knees, and then prostrated themselves before the throne. This is the Eastern method of adoration: first, the person worshipping, fell down on his knees; and then bowing down, touched the earth with his forehead. This latter act was prostration.

Him that liveth for ever.] This clause is wanting in ABC., thirty-seven others, Syriac, Arabic, Coptic, Æthiopic, some copies of the Slavonic; Itala, and Vulgate; and in Andreas and Arethas, ancient commentators on this Book. It is also wanting in some editions; and is undoubtedly spurious.

Now follow the least intelligible parts of this mysterious Book, on which so much has been written, and so much in vain. It is natural for man to desire to be wise; and the more difficult the subject the more it is studied: and the hope of finding out something by which the world and the church might be profited, has caused the most eminently learned men to employ their talents, and consume their time, on these abstruse prophecies. But of what use has all this learned and well meant labour been to mankind? Can hypothesis explain prophecy, and conjecture find a basis on which faith can rest? And what have we better in all attempts hitherto made to explain the mysteries of this Book

NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. When the Lamb opened one of the seals] It is worthy of remark, that the opening of the seals is not merely a declaration of what God will do, but is the exhibition of a purpose then accomplished; for, whenever the seal is opened, the sentence appears to be executed. It is supposed that, from chap. vi—xi. inclusive, the calamities which should fall on the enemies of Christianity, and particularly the Jews, are pointed out under various images; as well as the preservation of the Christians under those calamities.

One of the four beasts] Probably that with the face of a lion.—See ch. iv. 7.

Come and see.] Attend to what is about to be exhibited. It is very likely that all was exhibited before his eyes as in a scene; and he saw every act represented which was to take place; and all the persons and things which were to be the chief actors.

Verse 2. A white horse] Supposed to represent the gospel system; and pointing out its excellence, swiftness, and purity.

He that sat on him] Supposed to represent Jesus Christ.

A bow] The preaching of the gospel, darting conviction into the hearts of sinners.

A crown] The emblem of the kingdom which Christ was to establish on earth.

Conquering, and to conquer.] Overcoming and confounding the Jews first, and then the Gentiles; spreading more and more the doctrine and influence of the cross over the face of the earth.

Verse 3. The second beast] That which had the face of an ox.

Verse 4. Another horse—red] The emblem of war; perhaps also of severe persecution, and the martyrdom of the saints.

Him that sat thereon] Some say Christ; others Vespasian; others the Roman armies; others Artabanus, king of the Parthians, &c. &c.

Take peace from the earth] To deprive Judea of all tranquillity.

They should kill one another] This was literally the case with the Jews, while besieged by the Romans.

A great sword.] Great influence and success, producing terrible carnage.

Verse 5. The third beast] That which had the face of a man.

A black horse] The emblem of famine. Some think that which took place under Claudius.—See Matt. xxiv. 7. the same which was predicted by Agabus, Acts xi. 28.

A pair of balances] To show that the scarcity would be such, that every person must be put under an allowance.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.

6 And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, [a] A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and [b] see thou hurt not the oil and the wine.

7 And when he had opened the fourth seal, [c] I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see.

8 [d] And I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was death, and hell followed with him. And power was given [e] unto them over the fourth part of the earth, [f] to kill with sword, and with hunger, [g] and with death, [h] and with the beasts of the earth.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

9 And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under [i] the altar [k] the souls of them that were slain [l] for the word of God, and for [m] the testimony which they held:

10 And they cried with a loud voice, saying, [n] How long, O Lord, [o] holy and true, [p] dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

11 And [q] white robes were given unto every

[a] The word chœnix signifieth a measure containing one wine quart, and the twelfth part of a quart.——[b] Ch. 9. 4.——[c] Ch. 4. 7.——[d] Zech. 6. 3.——[e] Or, to him.——[f] Ezek. 14. 21.——[g] 2 Esdr. 15. 5.

[h] Lev. 26. 22.——[i] Ch. 8. 3. & 9. 13. & 14. 18.——[k] Ch. 20. 4.——[l] Ch. 1. 9.——[m] 2 Tim. 1. 8. ch. 12. 17. & 19. 10.——[n] See Zech. 1. 12.——[o] Ch. 3. 7.——[p] Ch. 11. 18. & 19. 2.——[q] Ch. 3. 4, 5. & 7. 9, 14.

Verse 6. A measure of wheat for a penny] The chœnix here mentioned, was a measure of dry things; and although the capacity is not exactly known, yet it is generally agreed that it contained as much as one man could consume in a day: and a penny, the Roman denarius, was the ordinary pay of a labourer. So it appears that in this scarcity, each might be able to obtain a bare subsistence by his daily labour; but a man could not, in such cases, provide for a family.

Three measures of barley] This seems to have been the proportion of value between the wheat and the barley. Barley was allowed to afford a poor aliment; and was given to the Roman soldiers instead of wheat, by way of punishment.

Hurt not the oil and the wine.] Be sparing of these: use them not as delicacies, but for necessity; because neither the vines nor the olives will be productive.

Verse 7. The fourth beast] That which had the face of an eagle.

Verse 8. A pale horse] The symbol of death. Pallida mors, pale death, was a very useful poetic epithet; of this symbol there can be no doubt, because it is immediately said, his name that sat on him was DEATH.

And hell followed with him.] The grave, or state of the dead, received the slain. This is a very elegant prosopopœia, or personification.

Over the fourth part of the earth] One fourth of mankind was to feel the desolating effects of this seal.

To kill with the sword] WAR.—With hunger, FAMINE.—With death, PESTILENCE.—And with the beasts of the earth, lions, tigers, hyænas, &c. which would multiply in consequence of the devastations occasioned by war, famine, and pestilence.

Verse 9. The fifth seal] There is no animal, nor any other being, to introduce this seal; nor does there appear to be any new event predicted: but the whole is intended to comfort the followers of God under their persecutions; and to encourage them to bear up under their distresses.

I saw under the altar] A symbolical vision was exhibited, in which he saw an altar; and under it the souls of those who had been slain for the word of God, martyred for their attachment to Christianity, are represented as being newly slain as victims to idolatry and superstition. The altar is upon earth, not in heaven.

Verse 10. And they cried with a loud voice] That is, their blood, like that of Abel, cried for vengeance: for we are not to suppose that there was any thing like a vindictive spirit in those happy and holy souls, who had shed their blood for the testimony of Jesus. We sometimes say blood cries for blood: that is, in the order of Divine justice, every murderer, and every murdering persecutor, shall be punished.

O Lord] Ὁ Δεσποτης, Sovereign Lord, Supreme Ruler; One having and exercising unlimited and uncontrolled authority;

Holy] In Thy own nature, hating iniquity;

And true] In all Thy promises and threatenings;

Dost thou not judge] The persecutors;

And avenge our blood] Inflict signal punishment;

On them that dwell on the earth] Probably meaning the persecuting Jews: they dwelt επι της γης, upon that land, a form of speech by which Judea is often signified, in the New Testament.

Verse 11. White robes] The emblems of purity, innocence, and triumph.

They should rest yet for a little season] This is a declaration that when the cup of the iniquity of the Jews should be full, they should then be punished in a mass. They were determined to proceed farther, and God permits them so to one of them; and it was said unto them, [a] that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

12 And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, [b] and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and [c] the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood;

13 [d] And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her [e] untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.

14 [f] And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and [g] every mountain and island were moved out of their places.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

15 And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, [h] hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains;

16 [i] And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb:

17 [k] For the great day of his wrath is come; [l] and who shall be able to stand?

do; reserving the fulness of their punishment till they had filled up the measure of their iniquity. If this book was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, as is most likely; then this destruction is that which was to fall upon the Jews; and the little time or season was that which elapsed between their martyrdom, or the date of this Book, and the final destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, under Vespasian and his son Titus, about A. D. 70. What follows may refer to the destruction of the Heathen Roman empire.

Verse 12. The sixth seal] This seal also is opened and introduced by Jesus Christ alone.

A great earthquake] A most stupendous change in the civil and religious constitution of the world. If it refer to Constantine the Great, the change that was made by his conversion to Christianity might be very properly represented under the emblem of an earthquake, and the other symbols mentioned in this and the following verses.

The sun, the ancient Pagan government of the Roman empire, was totally darkened; and like a black hair sackcloth, was degraded and humbled to the dust.

The moon, the ecclesiastical state of the same empire, became as blood, was totally ruined; their sacred rites abrogated, their priests and religious institutions desecrated, their altars cast down, their temples destroyed, or turned into places for Christian worship.

Verse 13. The stars of heaven] The gods and goddesses, demi-gods and deified heroes, of their poetical and mythological heaven, prostrated indiscriminately, and lay as useless as the figs or fruit of a tree shaken down before ripe, by a tempestuous wind.

Verse 14. And the heaven departed as a scroll] The whole system of Pagan and idolatrous worship, with all its spiritual, secular, and superstitious influence; blasted, shrivelled up, and rendered null and void, as a parchment scroll when exposed to the action of a strong fire.

And every mountain] All the props, supports, and dependencies of the empire; whether regal allies, tributary kings, dependent colonies, or mercenary troops; were all moved out of their places, so as to stand no longer in the same relation to that empire, and its worship, support, and maintenance, as they formerly did.

And island] The Heathen temples, with their precincts and enclosures, cut off from the common people, and into which none could come but the privileged, may be here represented by islands, for the same reasons.

Verse 15. The kings of the earth, &c.] All the secular powers who had endeavoured to support the Pagan worship by authority, influence, riches, political wisdom, and military skill; with every bondman, all slaves, who were in life and limb addicted to their masters or owners.

And every freeman] Those who had been manumitted; commonly called freedmen; and who were attached, through gratitude, to the families of their liberators. All hid themselves, were astonished at the total overthrow of the Heathen empire, and the revolution which had then taken place.

Verse 16. Said to the mountains and rocks] Expressions which denote the strongest perturbation and alarm. They preferred any kind of death to that which they apprehended from this most awful revolution.

From the face of him that sitteth on the throne] They now saw that all these terrible judgments came from the Almighty; and that Christ, the Author of Christianity, was now judging, condemning, and destroying them for their cruel persecutions of His followers.

Verse 17. For the great day of his wrath] The decisive and manifest time in which He will execute judgment on the oppressors of His people.

Who shall be able to stand?] No might can prevail against the might of God. All these things may literally apply to the final destruction of Jerusalem, and to the revolution which took place in the Roman empire, under Constantine the Great. Some apply them to the day of judgment; but they do not seem to have that awful event in view. These two events were the greatest that have ever taken place in the world, from the flood to the eighteenth century of the Christian era; and may well justify the strong figurative language used above.

Though I do not pretend to say that my remarks on this chapter point out its true signification, yet I find others have applied it in the same way. Dr. Dodd observes, that the fall of Babylon, Idumea, Judah, Egypt, and Jerusalem, has been described by the prophets in language equally pompous, figurative, and strong.—See Isa. xiii. 10. xxxiv. 4. concerning Babylon and Idumea; Jerem. iv. 23, 24. concerning Judah; Ezek. xxxii. 7. concerning Egypt; Joel ii. 10, 31. concerning Jerusalem: and our Lord Himself, Matt. xxiv. 29. concerning the same city, "Now," says he, "it is certain that the fall of any of these cities or kingdoms was not of greater concern or consequence to the world, nor more deserving to be described in pompous figures, than the fall of the Pagan Roman empire, when the great lights of the Heathen world, the sun, moon, and stars, the powers civil and ecclesiastical, were all eclipsed and obscured; the Heathen emperors and Cæsars were slain; the Heathen priests and augurs were extirpated; the Heathen officers and magistrates were removed; the temples were demolished, and their revenues were devoted to better uses. It is customary with the prophets, after they have described a thing in the most symbolical and figurative manner, to represent the same again in plainer language: and the same method is observed here, ver. 15, 16, 17. And the kings of the earth, &c. That is, Maximin, Galerius, Maxentius, Licinius, &c. with all their adherents and followers, were so routed and dispersed, that they hid themselves in dens, &c.; expressions used to denote the utmost terror and confusion. This is, therefore, a triumph of Christ over his Heathen enemies; and a triumph after a severe persecution: so that the time, and all the circumstances, as well as the series and order of the prophecy, agree perfectly with this interpretation. Galerius, Maximin, and Licinius, made even a public confession of their guilt; recalled their decrees and edicts against the Christians; and acknowledged the just judgments of God and of Christ in their own destruction."—See Newton, Lowman, &c. and Dr. Dodd, on this chapter; with the works of several more recent authors.

CHAPTER VII.

The four angels holding the four winds of heaven, 1. The angel with the seal of the living God, and sealing the servants of God out of the twelve tribes, whose number amounted to One Hundred and Forty-four Thousand, 2—8. Besides these there was an innumerable multitude from all nations, who gave glory to God and the Lamb, 9—12. One of the elders shows who these are; and describes their most happy state, 13—17.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. And after these things] Immediately after the preceding vision.

I saw four angels] Instruments which God employs in the dispensation of His Providence; we know not what.

On the four corners of the earth] On the extreme parts of the land of Judea, called ἡ γη, the land, or earth, by way of eminence.

Holding the four winds] Preventing evil from every quarter. Earth—sea, nor any tree: keeping the whole of the land free from evil, till the church of Christ should wax strong; and each of His followers have time to prepare for his

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

2 And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea,

3 Saying, [a] Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have [b] sealed the servants of our God [c] in their foreheads.

4 [d] And I heard the number of them which were sealed; and there were sealed [e] an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel.

5 Of the tribe of Judah were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand.

6 Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nephthalim were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses were sealed twelve thousand.

7 Of the tribe of Simeon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 98. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

8 Of the tribe of Zabulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

9 After this I beheld, and, lo, [f] a great multitude, which no man could number, [g] of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, [h] clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands;

10 And cried with a loud voice, saying, [i] Salvation to our God [k] which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

11 [l] And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, flight from Jerusalem, previously to its total destruction by the Romans.

Verse 2. The seal of the living God] This angel is represented as the chancellor of the Supreme King; and as ascending from the east, απο ανατολης ηλιου, from the rising of the sun. Some understand this of Christ, who is called ανατολη, the east, Luke i. 78.

It was given to hurt] Particular agents, employed by Divine Providence in the management of the affairs of the earth: but whether spiritual or material we know not.

Verse 3. Till we have sealed the servants of our God] There is manifestly an allusion to Ezek. ix. 4. here. By sealing, we are to understand consecrating the persons in a more especial manner to God: and showing, by this mark of God upon them, that they were under His more immediate protection; and that nothing should hurt them. It was a custom in the East, and indeed in the West too, to stamp, with a hot iron, the name of the owner upon the forehead or shoulder of his slave.

It is worthy of remark, that not one Christian perished in the siege of Jerusalem; all had left the city, and escaped to Pella. This I have often had occasion to notice.

Verse 4. I heard the number of them which were sealed] In the number of 144,000 is included all the Jews converted to Christianity; 12,000 out of each of the twelve tribes: but this must be only a certain for an uncertain number; for it is not to be supposed that just 12,000 were converted out of each of the twelve tribes.

Verse 5—8. Of the tribe of Judah, &c.] First, we are to observe that the tribe of Levi is here mentioned, though that tribe had no inheritance in Israel; but they now belonged to the spiritual priesthood. Secondly, That the tribe of Dan, which had an inheritance, is here omitted; as also the tribe of Ephraim. Thirdly, That the tribe of Joseph is here added, in the place of Ephraim. Ephraim and Dan being the principal promoters of idolatry, are left out in this enumeration.

Verse 9. A great multitude] This appears to mean the church of Christ among the Gentiles, for it was different from that collected from the twelve tribes; and it is here said to be of all nations, kindreds, people, and tongues.

Clothed with white robes] As emblems of innocence and purity. With palms in their hands, in token of victory gained over the world, the devil, and the flesh.

Verse 10. Salvation to our God] That is, God alone is the Author of the salvation of man; and this salvation is procured for, and given to, them through the Lamb, as their propitiatory Sacrifice.

Verse 11. All the angels, &c.] As there is joy in the presence of God, among these holy spirits, when one sinner

13 And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in [b] white robes? and whence came they?

14 And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, [c] These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have [d] washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

15 Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall [e] dwell among them.

16 [f] They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; [g] neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat.

repents, no wonder that they take such an interest in the gathering together of such innumerable multitudes, who are fully saved from their sins.

Verse 12. Saying, Amen] Giving their most cordial and grateful assent to the praises attributed to God and the Lamb.

Blessing, and glory, &c.] There are here seven different species of praise attributed to God, as in chap. v. 12. where see the Note.

Verse 13. One of the elders answered] A Hebraism for spoke. The question is here asked, that the proposer may have the opportunity of answering it.

Verse 14. Sir, thou knowest] That is, I do not know; but thou canst inform me.

Came out of great tribulation] Persecutions of every kind.

And have washed their robes] Have obtained their pardon and purity through the blood of the Lamb.

Their white robes cannot mean the righteousness of Christ, for this cannot be washed and made white in His own blood. This white linen is said to be the righteousness of the saints, chap. xix. 8. and this is the righteousness in which they stand before the throne; therefore it is not Christ's righteousness, but it is a righteousness wrought in them by the merit of His blood, and the power of His Spirit.

Verse 15. Therefore] Because they are washed in the blood of the Lamb,—are they before the throne, admitted to the immediate presence of God.

And serve him day and night] Without ceasing; being filled with the spirit of prayer, faith, love, and obedience.

Shall dwell among them] He lives in His own church, and in the heart of every true believer.

Verse 16. They shall hunger no more] They shall no longer be deprived of their religious ordinances, and the blessings attendant on them, as they were when in a state of persecution.

Neither shall the sun light on them] Their secular rulers being converted to God, became nursing fathers to the church.

Nor any heat.] Neither persecution nor affliction of any kind. These the Hebrews express by the term heat, scorching, &c.

Verse 17. The Lamb] The Lord Jesus, enthroned with His Father in ineffable glory.

Shall feed them] Shall communicate to them every thing calculated to secure, continue, and increase, their happiness.

Living fountains of waters] A spring, in the Hebrew phraseology, is termed living water, because constantly boiling up and running on. By these perpetual fountains, we are to understand endless sources of comfort and happiness, which Jesus Christ will open out of His own infinite plenitude to all glorified souls. These eternal living fountains will make an infinite variety in the enjoyments of the blessed. There will be no sameness, and consequently no cloying, with the perpetual enjoyment of the same things; every moment will open a new source of pleasure, instruction, and improvement: they shall make an eternal progression into the fulness of God. And as God is infinite, so His attributes are infinite; and throughout infinity more and more of those attributes will be discovered: and the discovery of each will be a new foundation, or source, of pleasure and enjoyment. These sources must be opening through all eternity; and yet, through all eternity, there will still remain, in the absolute perfections of the Godhead, an infinity of them to be opened! This is one of the finest images in the Bible.

God shall wipe away] In the most affectionate and fatherly manner,—all tears from their eyes, all causes of distress and grief. They shall have pure unmixed happiness. Reader, this is the happiness of those who are washed from their sins. Art thou washed? O rest not till thou art prepared to appear before God and the Lamb.

If these saints had not met with troubles and distresses, in all likelihood, they had not excelled so much in righteousness and true holiness. When all avenues of worldly comfort are shut up, we are obliged to seek our all in God; and there is nothing sought from Him that is not found in Him.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. The seventh seal] This is ushered in and opened only by the Lamb.

Silence in heaven] This must be a mere metaphor, silence being put here for the deep and solemn expectation of the stupendous things about to take place, which the opening of this seal had produced. When any thing prodigious or surprising is expected, all is silence; and even the breath is scarcely heard to be drawn.

Half an hour.] As heaven may signify the place in which all these representations were made to St. John, the half hour may be considered as the time during which no representation was made to him; the time in which God was preparing the august exhibition which follows.

There is here, and in the following verses, a strong allusion to different parts of the temple worship; a presumption that the temple was still standing, and the regular service of God carried on. The silence here, refers to this fact—while the priest went in to burn incense in the holy place, all the people continued in silent mental prayer without, till the priest returned.—See Luke i. 10. The angel mentioned here appears to execute the office of priest, as we shall by and by see.

Verse 2. The seven angels which stood before God] Probably the same as those called the seven spirits which are before his throne, chap. i. 4.; where see the Note. There is still an allusion here to the seven ministers of the Persian monarchs.—See Tobit, chap. xii. 15.

Verse 3. Another angel] About to perform the office of priest.

Having a golden censer] This was a preparation peculiar to the day of expiation. "On other days, it was the custom of the priest to take fire from the great altar in a silver censer; but on the day of expiation the high priest took the fire from the great altar, on a golden censer; and when he was come down from the great altar, he took incense from one of the priests, who brought it to him, and went with it to the golden altar; and while he offered the incense, the people prayed without in silence, which is the silence in heaven for half an hour."—See Sir Isaac Newton.

Much incense, that he should offer it] Judgments of God are now about to be executed: the saints, the genuine Christians, pray much to God for protection. The angelic Priest comes with much incense, standing between the living and those consigned to death, and offers His incense to God WITH the prayers of the saints.

Verse 4. The smoke of the incense—with the prayers]

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand.

5 And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it [a] into the earth: and [b] there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, [c] and an earthquake.

6 And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound.

7 The first angel sounded, [d] and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast [e] upon the earth: and the third part [f] of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

8 And the second angel sounded, [g] and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea: [h] and the third part of the sea [i] became blood;

9 [k] And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed.

10 And the third angel sounded, [l] and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, [m] and it fell upon the third part of

Though incense itself be an emblem of the prayers of the saints, Psa. cxli. 2. yet here they are said to ascend before God, as well as the incense. It is not said that the Angel presents these prayers; He presents the incense, and the prayers ascend WITH it. The ascending of the incense shows that the prayers and offering were accepted.

Verse 5. Cast it into the earth] That is, upon the land of Judea; intimating the judgments and desolations which were now coming upon it; and which appear to be farther opened in the sounding of the seven trumpets.

There were voices] All these seem to point out the confusion, commotions, distresses, and miseries, which were coming upon these people, in the wars which were at hand.

Verse 6. Prepared themselves to sound.] Each took up his trumpet, and stood prepared to blow his blast. Wars are here indicated: the trumpet was the emblem of war.

Verse 7. Hail and fire mingled with blood] This was something like the ninth plague of Egypt.—See Exod. ix. 18—24. The Lord sent thunder and hail—and fire mingled with the hail—and the fire ran along upon the ground. In the hail, and fire mingled with blood, some fruitful imaginations might find gunpowder, and cannon balls; cannister shot, and bombs.

They were cast upon the earth] Εις την γην, into that land: viz. Judea, thus often designated.

And the third part of trees] Before this clause, the Codex Alexandrinus, thirty-five others, the Syriac, Arabic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Slavonic, Vulgate, Andreas, Arethas, and some others, have και το τριτον της γης κατεκαη· and the third part of the land was burnt up. This reading, which is undoubtedly genuine, is found also in the Complutensian Polyglott.

The land was wasted; the trees, the chiefs of the nation, were destroyed: and the grass, the common people, were slain, or carried into captivity. High and low, rich and poor, were overwhelmed with one general destruction. This seems to be the meaning of these figures.

Many eminent men suppose that the irruption of the barbarous nations on the Roman empire is here intended. It is easy to find coincidences, when fancy runs riot. Later writers might find here the irruption of the Austrians, and British, and Prussians, Russians, and Cossacs, on the French empire!

Verse 8. A great mountain burning with fire] Supposed to signify the powerful nations which invaded the Roman empire. Mountain, in prophetic language, signifies a kingdom, Jer. xli. 25, 27, 30, 58. Great disorders, especially when kingdoms are moved by hostile invasions, are represented by mountains being cast into the midst of the sea, Psa. xlvi. 2. Seas, and collections of waters, mean peoples, as is shown in this Book, ch. xvii. 15. Therefore, great commotions in kingdoms, and among their inhabitants, may be here intended; but to whom, where, and when, these happened, or are to happen, we know not.

The third part of the sea became blood] Another allusion to the Egyptian plagues, Exod. vii. 20, 21. Third part is a rabbinism, expressing a considerable number. "When Rabbi Akiba prayed, wept, rent his garments, put off his shoes, and sat in the dust, the world was struck with a curse; and then the third part of the olives, the third part of the wheat, and the third part of the barley was smitten."—Rab. Mardochæus, in Notitiâ Kareorum, p. 102.

Verse 9. The third part of the ships were destroyed.] These judgments seem to be poured out on some maritime nation, destroying much of its population, and much of its traffic.

Verse 10. There fell a great star from heaven] This has given rise to various conjectures. Some say the star the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters;

11 [a] And the name of the star is called Wormwood: [b] and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.

12 [c] And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

13 And I beheld, [d] and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, [e] Wo, wo, wo, to the inhabiters of the earth, by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

means Attila and his Huns; others, Genseric with his Vandals falling on the city of Rome; others, Eleazar, the son of Annas, spurning the emperor's victims, and exciting the fury of the zealots; others, Arius, infecting the pure Christian doctrine with his heresy, &c. &c. It certainly cannot mean all these; and probably none of them. Let the Reader judge.

Verse 11. The star is called Wormwood] So called from the bitter or distressing effects produced by its influence.

Verse 12. The third part of the sun—moon—stars—was smitten] Supposed to mean Rome, with her senates, consuls, &c. eclipsed by Odoacer, king of the Heruli, and Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, in the fifth century. But all this is uncertain.

Verse 13. I—heard an angel flying] Instead of αγγελου πετωμενου, an angel flying, almost every MS. and Version of note has αετου πετωμενου, an eagle flying. The eagle was the symbol of the Romans; and was always on their ensigns. The three woes which are here expressed, were probably to be executed by this people; and upon the Jews and their commonwealth. Taken in this sense, the symbols appear consistent and appropriate: and the reading eagle, instead of angel, is undoubtedly genuine.

Verse 1. A star fall from heaven] An angel, encompassed with light, suddenly descended; and seemed like a star falling from heaven.

The key of the bottomless pit.] Power to inundate the earth with a flood of temporal calamities and moral evils.

Verse 2. He opened the bottomless pit] Το φρεαρ της αβυσσου, the pit of the bottomless deep. Some think the angel means Satan; and the bottomless pit, hell. Some

[a] and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.

3 And there came out of the smoke [b] locusts upon the earth: and unto them was given power, [c] as the scorpions of the earth have power.

4 And it was commanded them [d] that they should not hurt [e] the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not [f] the seal of God in their foreheads.

suppose Mohammed is meant; and Signior Pastorini professes to believe that Luther is intended!

There arose a smoke] False doctrine, obscuring the true light of heaven.

Verse 3. Locusts] Vast hordes of military troops; the description which follows certainly agrees better with the Saracens than with any other people or nation; but may also apply to the Romans.

As the scorpions of the earth have power.] Namely, to hurt men by stinging them. Scorpions may signify archers; and hence the description has been applied to Cestius Gallus, the Roman general, who had many archers in his army.

Verse 4. They should not hurt the grass] Neither the common people, the men of middling condition, nor the nobles. However, this appears rather to refer to the prudent counsels of a military chief, not to destroy the crops and herbage, of which they might have need in their campaigns.

Who have not the seal of God] All false, hypocritical, and heterodox Christians.

Verse 5. To them it was given] That is, they were permitted.

That they should be tormented five months] Some take these months literally, and apply them to the conduct of the zealots, who from May to September, in the year of the siege, produced dreadful contests among the people; or to the afflictions brought upon the Jews by Cestius Gallus, when he came against Jerusalem; before which he lay one whole summer, or nearly five months.—See Joseph. Bell. Jud. l. ii. c. 19.

Others consider the months as being prophetical months, each day being reckoned for a year; therefore this period must amount to one hundred and fifty years, counting thirty days to each month, as was the general custom of the Asiatics.

Their torment was as the torment of a scorpion] The phraseology here is peculiar, and probably refers to the warlike weapon called a scorpion, several of which, or men armed with them, Cestius Gallus brought with him in his army.

Isidore describes this scorpion thus:—Scorpio est sagitta venenata arcu vel tormentis excussa: quæ dum ad hominem venerit, virus qua figit infundit; unde et Scorpio nomen accepit. "The scorpion is a poisoned arrow shot from a bow or other instrument; which, when it wounds a man, deposits the poison, with which it is covered, in the wound: whence it has the name of scorpion." Seneca in his Hercules Œtus, Act. iv. v. 1218. describes the torment which is occasioned by this species of poisoned arrow:

Heu qualis intus scorpius, quis fervida
Plaga revulsus cancer infixus meas
Urit medullas?

Verse 6. In those days shall men seek death] So distressing shall be their sufferings and torment, that they shall long for death in any form, to be rescued from the evils of life. There is a sentiment much like this in Maximianus, Eleg. i. v. 111. commonly attributed to Cornelius Gallus:

Nunc quia longa mihi gravis est et inutilis ætas,
Vivere cum nequeam, sit mihi posse mori?
O quam dura premit miseros conditio vitæ!
Nec mors humano subjacet arbitrio
Dulce mori miseros; sed mors optata recedit:
At cùm tristis erit, præcipitata venit.

"Seeing that long life is both useless and burthensome,
When we can no longer live comfortably, shall we be permitted to die?
O how hard is the condition on which we hold life!
For death is not subjected to the will of man.
To die is sweet to the wretched; but wished-for death flees away.
Yet when it is not desired, it comes with the hastiest strides."

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them.

7 And [a] the shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared unto battle; [b] and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, [c] and their faces were as the faces of men.

8 And they had hair as the hair of women, and [d] their teeth were as the teeth of lions.

9 And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was [e] as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle.

10 And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: [f] and their power was to hurt men five months.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

11 [g] And they had a king over them, which is [h] the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name [i] Apollyon.

12 [k] One wo is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.

13 And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God.

14 Saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound [l] in the great river Euphrates.

15 And the four angels were loosed, which

Job expresses the same sentiment in the most plaintive manner:

> Why is light given to the miserable,
> And life to the bitter of soul?
> Who wait for death, but it is not;
> And dig for it more than hid treasures.
> They rejoice for it; and are glad;
> And exult when they find the grave.
> Ch. iii. 20—22.

Verse 7. The locusts were like unto horses] This description of the locusts appears to be taken from Joel ii. 4. The whole of this symbolical description of an overwhelming military force, agrees very well with the troops of Mohammed. The Arabs are the most expert horsemen in the world: they live so much on horseback, that the horse and his rider seem to make but one animal. The Romans also were eminent for their cavalry.

Crowns like gold] Not only alluding to their costly tiaras or turbans; but to the extent of their conquests, and the multitude of powers which they subdued.

Their faces were as the faces of men.] That is, though locusts symbolically, they are really men.

Verse 8. Hair, as the hair of women] No razor passes upon their flesh. Their hair long, and their beards unshaven.

Their teeth were as the teeth of lions.] They are ferocious and cruel.

Verse 9. They had breastplates—of iron] They seemed to be invulnerable; for no force availed against them.

The sound of their wings] Their hanging weapons and military trappings, with the clang of their shields and swords when they make their fierce onsets. This simile is borrowed from Joel ii. 5—7.

Verse 10. They had tails like unto scorpions] This may refer to the consequences of their victories. They infected the conquered with their pernicious doctrines.

Their power was to hurt men five months] The locusts make their principal ravages during the five summer months. But probably these may be prophetic months, as above, in ver. 5. 150 years.

Verse 11. A king over them] A supreme head: some think Mohammed; some think Vespasian.

The angel of the bottomless pit] The chief envoy of Satan.

Abaddon] From אבד abad, he destroyed.

Apollyon.] From απο intensive, and ολλυω to destroy. The meaning is the same, both in the Hebrew and Greek.

Verse 12. One wo is past] That is, the wo or desolation by the symbolical scorpions.

There come two woes more] In the trumpets of the sixth and seventh angels.

Verse 13. The four horns of the golden altar] This is another, not very obscure indication, that the Jewish temple was yet standing.

Verse 14. Loose the four angels] These four angels bound, hitherto restrained, in the Euphrates, are by some supposed to be the Arabs, the Saracens, the Tartars, or the Turks; by others, Vespasian's four generals, one in Arabia, one in Africa, one in Alexandria, and one in Palestine.

Verse 15. For an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year] We have in this place a year resolved into its com-were prepared [a] for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men.

16 And [b] the number of the army [c] of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: [d] and I heard the number of them.

17 And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone: [e] and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone.

18 By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths.

19 For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: [f] for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

20 And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues [g] yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship [h] devils, [i] and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk:

21 Neither repented they of their murders, [k] nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

ponent parts. Twenty-four hours constitute a day, seven days make a week, four weeks make a month, and twelve months make a year. Probably no more is meant than that these four angels were at all times prepared and permitted to inflict evil on the people against whom they had received their commission. There are some who understand these divisions of time as prophetical periods; and to these I must refer, not professing to discuss such uncertainties.

Verse 16. Two hundred thousand thousand] Δυο μυριαδες μυριαδων, two myriads of myriads; that is, two hundred millions: an army that was never yet got together from the foundation of the world; and could not find forage in any part of the earth. Perhaps it only means vast numbers, multitudes without number. Such a number might be literally true of the locusts. Those who will have their particular system supported by the images in this most obscure Book, tell us that the number here means all the soldiers that were employed in this war from its commencement to its end! Those who can receive this saying, let them receive it.

Verse 17. Breastplates of fire—jacinth, and brimstone] That is, red, blue, and yellow: the first is the colour of fire, the second of jacinth, and the third of sulphur.

And the heads of the horses] Is this an allegorical description of great ordnance? Cannons, on the mouths of which horses' heads were formed; or the mouth of the cannon cast in that form? Fire, smoke, and brimstone, is a good allegorical representation of gunpowder. The Othmans made great use of heavy artillery in their wars with the Greeks of the lower empire.

Verse 18. By these three was the third part of men killed] That is, by these was great carnage made.

Verse 19. Their power is in their mouth] From these the destructive balls are projected—and in their tails; the breech where the charge of gunpowder is lodged?

Their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads] If cannons are intended, the description, though allegorical, is plain enough; for brass ordnance especially, are frequently thus ornamented, both at their muzzles and at their breech.

Verse 20. Yet repented not] The commission which these horsemen had was against idolaters; and, though multitudes of them were destroyed, yet the residue continued their senseless attachment to dumb idols; and therefore heavier judgments might be expected. These things are supposed to refer to the desolation brought upon the Greek church by the Ottomans, who entirely ruined that church, and the Greek empire. The church which was then remaining, was the Latin or western church, which was not at all corrected by the judgments which fell upon the eastern church, but continued its senseless adoration of angels, saints, relics, &c. and does so to the present day. If, therefore, God's wrath be kindled against such, this church has much to fear.

Verse 21. Neither repented they of their murders] Their cruelties towards the genuine followers of God; the Albigenses, and Waldenses, and others; against whom they published crusades, and hunted them down, and butchered them in the most shocking manner. The innumerable murders by the horrible inquisition need not be mentioned.

Their sorceries] Those who apply this also to the Romish church, understand by it the various tricks, sleights of hand, or legerdemain, by which they impose on the common people, in causing images of Christ to bleed; and the various pretended miracles wrought at the tombs, &c. of pretended saints, holy wells, and such like.

Fornications] Giving that honour to various creatures; which is due only to the Creator.

Their thefts] Their exactions and impositions on men for indulgences, pardons, &c. These things may be intended, but it is going too far to say that this is the true interpretation. And yet, to express any doubt on this subject, is with some little else than heresy. If such men can see these things so clearly in such obscure prophecies, let them be thankful for their sight; and indulgent to those who still sit in darkness.

CHAPTER X.

The description of a mighty angel, with the little book in his hand, 1, 2. The seven thunders, 3, 4. The angel swears that there shall be time no longer, 5—7. John is commanded to take the little book and eat it: he does so, and receives a commission to prophesy to many peoples, 8—11.

AND I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: [a] and a rainbow was upon his head, and [b] his face was as it were the sun, and [c] his feet as pillars of fire:

2 And he had in his hand a little book open: [d] and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth,

3 And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, [e] seven thunders uttered their voices.

4 And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, [f] Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.

NOTES ON CHAP. X.

Verse 1. Another mighty angel] Either Christ, or His representative. Clothed with a cloud; a symbol of the Divine Majesty.

A rainbow was upon his head] The token of God's merciful covenant with mankind.

His face was as it were the sun] So intensely glorious that it could not be looked on.

His feet as pillars of fire] To denote the rapidity and energy of His motions, and the stability of His counsels.

Verse 2. A little book open] Meaning, probably, some design of God long concealed, but now about to be made manifest. But who knows what it means?

His right foot upon the sea, and his left—upon the earth] To show that He had the command of each; and that His power was universal, all things being under His feet.

Verse 3. Seven thunders] Seven being a number of perfection, it may here mean many, great, loud, and strong peals of thunder, accompanied with distinct voices; but what was said St. John was not permitted to reveal, ver. 4.

Verse 5. Lifted up his hand to heaven] As one making an appeal to the Supreme Being.

Verse 6. By him that liveth for ever and ever] The eternal, self-existent Jehovah, the Maker of all things.

That there should be time no longer] That the great counsels relative to the events already predicted should be immediately fulfilled: and that there should be no longer delay. This has no reference to the day of judgment.

Verse 7. The mystery of God should be finished] What hath declared to his servants the prophets.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

8 And [a] the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth.

9 And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, [b] Take it and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

10 And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; [c] and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, [d] my belly was bitter.

11 And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

this mystery refers to, who knows? Nor have we more knowledge concerning the sounding of the seventh angel. On these points there is little agreement among learned men. Whether it mean the destruction of Jerusalem, or the destruction of the Papal power, or something else, we know not. And yet, with what confidence do men speak of the meaning of these hidden things!

Declared to his servants the prophets] It is most likely, therefore, that this trumpet belongs to the Jewish state.

Verse 8. Take the little book which is open] Learn from this angel what should be published to the world.

Verse 9. Take it and eat it up] Fully comprehend its meaning; study it thoroughly.

Verse 10. It was in my mouth sweet as honey] There was in it some pleasing, some unpleasing intelligence. I read of the consolations and protection of the true worshippers of God, and did rejoice; I read of the persecutions of the church, and was distressed.

Verse 11. Thou must prophesy again] Thou must write not only for the instruction of the Jews in Palestine, but of those in the different provinces; as well as the Heathens, and Heathen emperors and potentates, in general.

The Reader will find, on comparing this chapter with Dan. viii. and xii. and Ezek. ii. and iii. that there are several things similar in both: and the writer of the Apocalypse appears to keep these two prophets continually in view. I must once more say, that I do not understand these prophecies; therefore, I do not take upon me to explain them. I see, with regret, how many learned men have mistaken their way here. Commentators, and even some of the most modern, have strangely trifled in these solemn things: all trumpets, vials, woes, &c. are perfectly easy to them; yet, from their descriptions, none get wise either to common sense, or to the things that make for their peace.

On the same ground, I cannot admit the interpretation that is given of the word χρονος, translated time, in verse 6. which some have construed into an artificial period of 1,111 years, which they term chronos; hence we have the chronos, half-chronos, and non-chronos. Bengel has said much on these points; but to very little purpose: the word in the above place seems to signify delay simply; and probably refers to the long-suffering of God being ended, in reference to Jerusalem; for, I all along take for probable, that this Book was written previously to the destruction of that city.

CHAPTER XI.

The command to measure the temple, 1, 2. The two witnesses which should prophesy twelve hundred and sixty days, 3. The description, power, and influence, of these witnesses, 4—6. They shall be slain by the beast which shall arise out of the bottomless pit; and shall arise again after three days and a half, and ascend to heaven, 7—12. After which shall be a great earthquake, 13. The introduction to the third wo, 14. The sounding of the seventh angel, and the four and twenty elders give glory to God, 15—19.

AND there was given me [a] a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, [b] Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein.

2 But [c] the court which is without the temple [d] leave out, and measure it not; [e] for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they [f] tread under foot [g] forty and two months.

3 And [h] I will give power unto my two [i] witnesses, [k] and they shall prophesy [l] a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth.

4 These are the [m] two olive-trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth.

NOTES ON CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. And there was given me a reed] See Ezek. chap. xl. 3, &c.

Measure the temple of God] This must refer to the temple of Jerusalem: and this is another presumptive evidence that it was yet standing.

Verse 2. But the court—is given unto the Gentiles] The measuring of the temple probably refers to its approaching destruction, and the termination of the whole Levitical service; and this we find was to be done by the Gentiles, (Romans,) who were to tread it down forty-two months; i. e. just three years and a half, or twelve hundred and sixty days. This must be a symbolical period.

Verse 3. My two witnesses] This is extremely obscure: the conjectures of interpreters are as unsatisfactory as they are endless on this point.—Conjecturas conjecturis superstruunt, parùm verosimiles, says Rosenmuller: quorum sententias enarrare, meum non est. I say the same. Those who wish to be amused, or bewildered, may have recourse both to ancients and moderns on this subject.

Verse 4. These are the two olive-trees] Mentioned Zech. iv. 14. which there represent Zerubbabel, and Joshua the high priest. The whole account seems taken from Zech. iv. 1—14. Whether the prophet and the apostle mean the same things by these emblems, we know not.

Verse 5. Fire proceedeth out of their mouth] That is, they are commissioned to denounce the judgments of God against all who would attempt to prevent them from proceeding in their ministry.

Verse 6. These have power to shut heaven] As Elijah did, 1 Kings xvii. and xviii.

To turn them to blood] As Moses did, Exod. vii. They shall have power to afflict the land with plagues, similar to those which were inflicted on the Egyptians.

Verse 7. The beast that ascended out of the bottomless pit] This may be what is called Antichrist; some power that is opposed to genuine Christianity. But what, or whence, except from the bottomless pit, i. e. under the influence and appointment of the devil, we cannot tell: nor do we know by what name this power or being should be called. The conjectures concerning the two witnesses, and the beast, have been sufficiently multiplied. If the whole passage, as some think, refer to the persecution raised by the Jews against the Christians, then some Jewish power or person is the beast from the bottomless pit. If it refer to the early ages of Christianity, then the beast may be one of the persecuting Heathen emperors. If it refer to a later age of Christianity, then the beast may be the papal power, and the Albigenses and Waldenses the two witnesses, which were nearly extinguished by the horrible persecution raised up against them by the church of Rome. Whatever may be here intended, the earth has not yet covered their blood.

Verse 8. The great city] Some say Rome; which may be spiritually called Sodom for its abominations, Egypt for 9 [a] And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, [b] and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.

10 [c] And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, [d] and shall send gifts one to another; [e] because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth.

11 [f] And after three days and an half [g] the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them.

12 And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. [h] And they ascended up to heaven [i] in a cloud; [k] and their enemies beheld them.

13 And the same hour [l] was there a great earthquake, [m] and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain [n] of men seven thousand: and the remnant were affrighted, [o] and gave glory to the God of heaven.

14 [p] The second wo is past; and, behold, the third wo cometh quickly.

15 And [q] the seventh angel sounded: [r] and there were great voices in heaven, saying, [s] The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; [t] and he shall reign for ever and ever.

16 And [u] the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, its tyrannous cruelty, and the place where our Lord was crucified, because of its persecution of the members of Christ: but Jerusalem itself may be intended. All these things I must leave to others.

Verse 9. Shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves] They shall be treated with the greatest barbarity. Refusal of burial to the dead was allowed to be the sum of brutality and cruelty.

Verse 10. Shall send gifts] This was a custom in days of public rejoicing. They sent gifts to each other, and gave portions to the poor.—See Esther ix. 19, 22.

Verse 11. They stood upon their feet] Were restored to their primitive state.

Verse 12. They ascended up to heaven] Enjoyed a state of great peace and happiness.

Verse 13. A great earthquake] Violent commotions among the persecutors; and revolutions of states.

Slain of men seven thousand] Many perished in those popular commotions.

The remnant were affrighted] Seeing the hand of God's judgments so remarkably stretched out.

Gave glory] Received the pure doctrines of the gospel, and glorified God for His judgments and their conversion.

Verse 14. The second wo is past] That which took place under the sixth trumpet, and has been already described.

The third wo cometh] Is about to be described under the seventh trumpet, which the angel is now prepared to sound.

Of the three woes which were denounced, chap. viii. 13. the first is described, chap. ix. 1—12.; the second, chap. ix. 13—21. These woes are supposed by many learned men to refer to the destruction of Jerusalem. The first wo—the seditions among the Jews themselves. The second wo—the besieging of the city by the Romans. The third wo—the taking and sacking of the city, and burning the temple. This was the greatest of all the woes; as, in it, the city and temple were destroyed, and nearly a million of men lost their lives.

Verse 15. There were great voices in heaven] All the heavenly host, angels and redeemed human spirits, joined together to magnify God, that He had utterly discomfited His enemies, and rendered His friends glorious. This will be truly the case when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of God and of His Christ. But when shall this be? Some say, What is meant by these words, has already taken place in the destruction of the Jewish state; and sending the gospel throughout the Gentile world. Others say that it refers to the Millennium, and to the consummation of all things.

Verse 16. The four and twenty elders] The representatives of the universal church of Christ.—See chap. v. 8—10.

Verse 17. O Lord God Almighty, which art] This gives Almighty, [a] which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, [b] and hast reigned.

18 [c] And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, [d] and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, [e] small and great; [f] and shouldest destroy them which [g] destroy the earth.

a proper view of God in His eternity; all times are here comprehended, the present, the past, and the future. This is the infinitude of God.

Hast taken to thee] Thou hast exercised that power which Thou ever hast; and Thou hast broken the power of Thy enemies, and exalted Thy church.

Verse 18. The nations were angry] Were enraged against Thy gospel, and determined to destroy it.

Thy wrath is come] The time to avenge Thy servants, and to destroy all Thy enemies.

The time of the dead that they should be judged] The word κριναι, to judge, is often used in the sense of to avenge. The dead, here, may mean those who were slain for the testimony of Jesus; and the judging is, the avenging of their blood.

Give reward unto thy servants] Who have been faithful unto death.

The prophets] The faithful teachers in the church—The saints; the Christians.

And them that fear thy name] All Thy sincere followers.

Destroy them that destroy the earth] All the authors, fomenters, and encouragers, of bloody wars.

Verse 19. The temple of God was opened in heaven] The true worship of God was established and performed in the Christian church: this is the true temple, that at Jerusalem being destroyed.

And there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.] These great commotions were intended to introduce the following vision; for the 12th chapter is properly a continuation of the 11th, and should be read in strict connexion with it.

I now come to a part of this Book that is deemed of the greatest importance, by the Protestant church; but is peculiarly difficult and obscure. I have often acknowledged my own incapacity to illustrate these prophecies. I might have availed myself of the labours of others; but I know not who is right; or whether any of the writers on this Book have hit the sense, is more than I can assert; and more than I think. The illustration of the xiith, xiiith, and xviith chapters which I have referred to in the Preface, drawn up and displayed with great industry and learning, I shall insert in its place, as by far the most probable I have yet seen; but I leave the learned author responsible for his own particular views of the subject.

CHAPTER XII.

The woman clothed with the sun, and in travail, 1, 2. The great red dragon, waiting to devour the child as soon as born, 3, 4. The woman is delivered of a son, who is caught up unto God; and she flees to the wilderness, 5, 6. The war in heaven, between Michael and the dragon, 7, 8. The dragon and his angels are overcome and cast down to the earth; whereupon the whole heavenly host give glory to God, 10, 11. The dragon, full of wrath at his defeat, persecutes the woman, 12, 13. She flees to the wilderness, whither he attempts to pursue her; and he makes war with her seed, 14—17.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

AND there appeared a great [a] wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars:

2 And she being with child cried, [b] travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.

3 And there appeared another [c] wonder in heaven; and behold [d] a great red dragon, [e] having seven heads and ten horns, [f] and seven crowns upon his heads.

4 And [g] his tail drew the third part [h] of the stars of heaven, [i] and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood [k] before the woman which was ready to be delivered, [l] for to devour her child as soon as it was born.

5 And she brought forth a man child, [m] who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

6 And [n] the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there [o] a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

7 And there was war in heaven: [p] Michael and his angels fought [q] against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels,

8 And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven.

9 And [r] the great dragon was cast out, [s] that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, [t] which deceiveth the whole world: [u] he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

10 And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, [x] Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, [y] which accused them before our God day and night.

NOTES ON CHAP. XII.

Before I introduce the comment, mentioned at the close of the preceding chapter, I think it necessary to state that the phraseology of the whole chapter is peculiarly rabbinical, and shall insert a few selections which may serve to illustrate some of the principal figures.

In Sohar Exod. fol. 47. col. 187. we find a mystical interpretation of Exod. xxi. 22. If men strive, and hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart, he shall be surely punished, as the woman's husband will lay upon him. If men strive, i. e. Michael and Sammael, and hurt a woman with child, i. e. the Israelitish church, so that her fruit depart, hoc fit in exilio, he shall surely be punished; i. e. Sammael. As the woman's husband, that is, the holy and blessed God.

Verse 5. And her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne] In Yalcut Rubeni are these words: "Rachel, the niece of Methusala, was pregnant, and ready to be delivered in Egypt. They trod upon her, and the child came out of her bowels, and lay under the bed: Michael descended, and took him up to the throne of glory. On that same night the first-born of Egypt were destroyed."

Verse 7. There was war in heaven] In the same treatise, fol. 87. 2. on Exod. xiv. 7. Pharaoh took six hundred chariots, we have these words: "There was war among those above, and among those below, ומלחמה היתה חזקה בשמים ve-hamilchamah, haiyetah chazakeh ba-shamayim, and there was great war in heaven."

Of Michael, the rabbins are full.—See much in Schoettgen, and see the Note on Jude, ver. 9.

The dragon—and his angels] The same as Rab. Sam. ben David, in Chasad Shimuel, calls "סמאל וחיילותיו Sammael ve-chayilotaiv, Sammael and his troops," fol. 28. 2.

Verse 9. That old serpent] The rabbins speak much of this being; sometimes under the notion of יצר הרע yetsar ha-raâ, "the evil principle;" and sometimes Sammael.

Notes on Chap. XII. by J. E. C.

Verse 1. There appeared a great wonder in heaven, a woman clothed with the sun—That the woman here represents the true church of Christ, most commentators are agreed. In other parts of the Apocalypse the pure church of Christ is evidently portrayed by a woman. In chap. xix. ver. 7. a great multitude are represented as saying, "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to Him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and His WIFE hath made herself ready." In chap. xxi. 9. an angel talks with St. John, saying, "Come hither, I will show thee the BRIDE, the Lamb's wife." That the Christian church is meant will appear also from her being clothed with the sun, a striking emblem of Jesus Christ, the Sun of righteousness, the light and glory of the church; for the countenance of the Son of God is as the sun shineth in his strength. The woman has The moon under her feet—Bishop Newton understands this of the Jewish typical worship; and, indeed, the Mosaic system of rites and ceremonies could not have been better represented; for it was the shadow of good things to come. The moon is the less light, ruling over the night, and deriving all its illumination from the sun: in like manner the Jewish dispensation was the bright moonlight night of the world, and possessed a portion of the glorious light of the gospel. At the rising of the sun the night is ended, and the lunar light no longer necessary, as the sun which enlightens her shines full upon the earth: exactly in the same way has the whole Jewish system of types and shadows been superseded by the birth, life, crucifixion, death, resurrection, ascension, and intercession, of Jesus Christ. Upon the head of the woman is

A crown of twelve stars—A very significant representation of the twelve apostles, who were the first founders of the Christian church; and by whom the gospel was preached in great part of the Roman empire with astonishing success. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the STARS for ever and ever." Dan. xii. 3.

Verse 2. And she being with child, cried, travailing in birth, &c.—This, when taken in connexion with the following verses, is a striking figure of the great persecution which the church of Christ should suffer under the Heathen Roman emperors, but more especially of that long and most dreadful one under Dioclesian. The woman is represented as BEING with child, to show that the time would speedily arrive when God's patient forbearance with the Heathen would be terminated, and that a deliverer should arise in the Christian world who would execute the Divine vengeance upon Paganism.

Verse 3. There appeared another wonder—a great red dragon—The dragon here is a symbol not of the Roman empire in general, but of the HEATHEN Roman empire. This great Pagan power must have, therefore, been thus represented from the religion which it supported. But what is a dragon? An entirely fabulous beast of antiquity. Consequently, in this respect, a most proper emblem of the Heathen worship, which consisted in paying adoration to numerous imaginary beings, termed gods, goddesses, &c. The very foundation of the Heathen religious system is mostly built upon fable; and it is very difficult to trace many of their superstitions to any authentic original; and even those which appear to derive their origin from the Sacred writings are so disguised in fable as literally to bear no more resemblance to the truth than the dragon of the ancients does to any animal with which we are acquainted. But it may be asked why the Spirit of God should represent the Heathen Roman empire by a dragon rather than by any other of the fabulous animals with which the mythology of the ancient Romans abounded. The answer is as follows: In the eighth chapter of the prophet Daniel, God has represented the kingdom of the Greeks by a he-goat, for no other apparent reason than this, that it was the national military standard of the Grecian monarchy: we may, therefore, expect that the Pagan Roman empire is called A DRAGON on a similar account. In confirmation of this point it is very remarkable that the dragon was the most principal standard of the Romans next to the eagle in the second, third, fourth, and fifth, centuries of the Christian era. Of this we have abundant evidence in the writings of both Heathens and Christians. Arrian is the earliest writer who has mentioned that dragons were used as military standards among the Romans. See his Tactics, c. 51. Hence Schwebelius supposes that this standard was introduced after Trajan's conquest of the Daci. See Vegetius de Re Militari à Schwebelio, p. 191. Argentorati, 1806; and Grævii Thesaur. Antiq. Roman. Tom. X. col. 1529. Vegetius, who flourished about A. D. 386, says, lib. ii. c. 13. Primum signum totius legionis est aquila, quam aquilifer portat. DRACONES etiam per singulas cohortes à draconariis feruntur ad prælium. "The first standard of the whole legion is the eagle, which the aquilifer carries. DRAGONS are also borne to battle by the draconarii." As a legion consisted of ten cohorts, there were, therefore, ten draconarii to one aquilifer: hence, from the great number of draconarii in an army, the word signarii or signiferi, standard-bearers, came at last to mean the carriers of the dragon-standards only, the others retaining the name of aquiliferi.—See Veget. lib. ii. c. 7. and his commentators. The Heathen Roman empire is called a RED dragon; and, accordingly, we find from the testimony of ancient writers that the dragon-standards of the Romans were painted red. We read in Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. xvi. c. 12. of PURPUREUM signum draconis, "the purple standard of the dragon."—See also Claudianus in Rufinum, lib. ii. l. 177, 178. Pitiscus in his Lexicon Antiq. Rom. and Ducange in his Glossarium Mediæ et Infimæ Latinitatis, sub voc. Draco, have considered this subject at great length, especially the latter writer, who has made several quotations from Claudianus, Sidonius, Prudentius, and others, in which not only the standard, but also the image of the dragon itself, is stated to be of a red or purple colour. Of what has been said above respecting the dragon, this is then the sum: a huge fabulous beast is shown to St. John, by which some GREAT PAGAN power is symbolically represented; and the RED dragon is selected from among the numerous imaginary animals which the fancies of mankind have created to show that this great Pagan power is the Heathen ROMAN empire.

Having seven heads.—As the dragon is an emblem of the Heathen Roman power, its heads must denote Heathen forms of government.—See the Note on chap. xvii. 10. where the heads of the beast are explained in a similar way. These were exactly seven, and are enumerated by Tacitus (Annal. lib. i. in principio) in words to the following effect: "The city of Rome was originally governed by kings. L. Brutus instituted liberty and the consulate. The dictatorship was only occasionally appointed; neither did the decemviral power last above two years; and the consular power of the military tribunes was not of long continuance. Neither had Cinna nor Sylla a long domination: the power of Pompey and Crassus was also soon absorbed in that of Cæsar; and the arms of Lepidus and Antony finally yielded to those of Augustus." From this passage it is evident to every person well acquainted with the Roman history, that the seven forms of government in the Heathen Roman world were, 1, The Regal power; 2, The Consulate; 3, The Dictatorship; 4, The Decemvirate; 5, The consular power of the Military Tribunes; 6, The Triumvirate; and, 7, The Imperial Government.

It is singular that commentators in general, in their citation of this passage, have taken no notice of the triumvirate, a form of government evidently as distinct from any of the others, as kings are from consuls, or consuls from emperors. For the triumvirate consisted in the division of the Roman republic into three parts, each governed by an officer possessed with consular authority in his own province; and all three united together in the regulation of the whole Roman state. Consequently, it differed entirely from the imperial power, which was the entire conversion of the Roman state from a republic to a monarchy.

And ten horns—That these ten horns signify as many kingdoms is evident from the seventh chapter of Daniel, where the angel, speaking of the fourth beast, says, that "the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise;" and in this view of the passage many commentators are agreed, who also admit that the ten kingdoms are to be met with "amid the broken pieces of the Roman empire."

And it is evident that nothing less than the dismemberment of the Roman empire, and its division into ten independent kingdoms, can be intended by the angel's interpretation just quoted. If, therefore, the ten horns of Daniel's fourth beast point out as many kingdoms; for the very same reason must the horns of the dragon have a similar meaning. But the Roman empire was not divided into several independent kingdoms till a considerable time after it became Christian. In what sense then can it be said that the different kingdoms into which the Roman empire was divided by the barbarous nations are horns of the dragon? They were so, because it was the Roman monarchy, in its seventh DRACONIC form of government, which was dismembered by the barbarians. For, though the Roman empire was not completely dismembered till the fifth century; it is well known that the depression of the Heathen idolatry, and the advancement of Christianity to the throne, effected not the least change in the form of government: the Romans continued still to be under subjection to the Imperial power; and, consequently, when the Heathen barbarous nations divided the Roman empire among themselves, they might very properly be denominated horns of the dragon; as it was by means of their incursions that the imperial power, FOUNDED by the Heathen Cæsars, was abolished. Machiavel and Bishop Lloyd enumerate the horns of the dragon thus: 1. The kingdom of the Huns. 2. The kingdom of the Ostrogoths. 3. The kingdom of the Visigoths. 4. The kingdom of the Franks. 5. The kingdom of the Vandals. 6. The kingdom of the Sueves and Alans. 7. The kingdom of the Burgundians. 8. The kingdom of the Heruli, Rugii, Scyrri, and other tribes which composed the Italian kingdom of Odoacer. 9. The kingdom of the Saxons. And, 10. The kingdom of the Lombards.

And seven crowns upon his heads.—In the seven Roman forms of government already enumerated, Heathenism has been the crowning, or dominant, religion.

Verse 4. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven.—It is not unusual in Scripture, as Dr. Mitchell observes, to call the hindmost of an enemy the tail; as in Josh. x. 19. Ye shall cut off the hindmost of them, which is literally, in Hebrew, וזנבתם אותם "Ye shall cut off their tail."—See also Deut. xxv. 18. It is also observable that the word ουρα in this verse has been used by the Greeks in the same sense with the Hebrew word זנב already referred to. Thus ουρα στρατου, which we would translate the rear of an army, is literally the tail of an army. See the Thesaurus of Stephens in loc. The tail of the dragon is, therefore, the Heathen Roman power in its seventh or last form of government, viz. the imperial power; and is not, as Dr. Mitchell supposes, to be restricted to the last Heathen Roman emperors. The Heathen imperial power is said to draw the third part of the stars of heaven; by which has generally been understood that the Roman empire subjected the third part of the princes and potentates of the earth. But that this is not a correct statement of the fact is evident from the testimony of ancient history. The Roman empire was always considered and called the empire of the world by ancient writers. See Dionys. Halicar. Antiq. Rom. lib. i. prope principium; Pitisci Lexicon Antiq. Roman sub voc. imperium; Ovidii Fast. lib. ii. l. 683; Vegetius de Re Militari, lib. i. c. 1; &c. &c. And it is even so named in Scripture: for St. Luke, in the second chapter of his Gospel, informs us that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus that THE WHOLE WORLD should be taxed; by which is evidently meant the Roman empire. The whole mystery of this passage consists in the misapprehension of its symbolical language. In order, therefore, to understand it, the symbols here used must be examined. By heaven is meant the most eminent or ruling part of any nation. This is evident from the very nature of the symbol; for "heaven is God's throne:" they, therefore, who are advanced to the supreme authority in any state are very properly said to be taken up into heaven, because they are raised to this eminence by the favour of the Lord, and are ministers of his to do his pleasure. And the calamity which fell upon Nebuchadnezzar was to instruct him in this important truth that the heavens do rule; that is, that all monarchs possess their kingdoms by Divine appointment; and that no man is raised to power by what is usually termed the chances of war; but that "the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men." The meaning of heaven being thus ascertained, it cannot be difficult to comprehend the meaning of earth, this being evidently its opposite, that is, every thing in subjection to the heaven or ruling part. Stars have already been shown to denote ministers of religion; and this is more fully evident from ch. i. of this Book, where the seven stars which the Son of God holds in His right hand are explained to signify the seven angels [or messengers] of the seven churches, by whom must be meant the seven pastors or ministers of these churches. The resemblance of ministers to stars is very striking; for as the stars give light upon the earth, so are ministers the lights of the cause they advocate; and their position in heaven, the symbol of domination, very fitly betokens the spiritual authority of priests or ministers over their flocks. Hence as the woman, or Christian church, has upon her head a crown of twelve stars, which signifies that she is under the guidance of the twelve apostles, who are the twelve principal lights of the Christian world; so has the dragon also his stars or ministers. The stars, therefore, which the dragon draws with his tail, must represent the whole body of Pagan priests, who were the stars or lights of the Heathen world. But in what sense can it be said that the Heathen Roman empire, which ruled over the whole known world, only draws a third part of the stars of heaven? The answer is, the religious world in the time of St. John was divided into three grand branches, viz. The Christian world, the Jewish world, and the Heathen and Pagan world; consequently, as a dragon, a fabulous animal, is an emblem of a civil power supporting a religion founded in fable; it necessarily follows that the stars or ministers of the Jews and Christians cannot be numbered among those which he draws with his tail; as they were not the advocates of his idolatry, but were ministers of a religion founded by the God of heaven, and consequently formed no part of the Pagan world; though they were in subjection in secular matters to the Pagan Roman empire. The tail of the dragon, therefore, draweth after him the whole Heathen world.

And cast them upon the earth—That is, reduced all the Pagan priests under the Roman yoke. The words of the prophecy are very remarkable. It is said the tail of the dragon draweth (for so συρει should be translated;) but it is added, and HATH CAST them upon the earth, to show that at the time the Apocalypse was written, the world was divided into the three grand religious divisions already referred to; but that the tail of the dragon, or the Pagan Roman power under its last form of government, had brought the whole Heathen world, (which was a third part of the religious world in the apostolic age,) into subjection, previously to the communication of the Revelation to St. John. It is the dragon's tail that draws the third part of the stars of heaven; therefore, it was during the dominion of his last form of government that Christianity was introduced into the world; for in the time of the six preceding draconic forms of government, the world was divided religiously into only two grand branches, Jews and Gentiles. That the sense in which the third part is here taken is the one intended in the prophecy is put beyond all controversy; when it is considered that this very division is made in the first and third verses, in which mention is made of the woman clothed with the sun, the Christian church, the moon under her feet, or Jewish church, and the dragon, or Heathen power. Thus the Heathen IMPERIAL government is doubly represented; first, by one of the seven draconic heads, to show that it was one of those seven Heathen forms of government which have been successively at the head of the Roman state; and, secondly, by the dragon's tail, because it was the last of those seven. For a justification of this method of interpretation, see on the angel's double explanation of the heads of the beast, chap. xvii. 9, 10, 16.

And the dragon stood before the woman, &c.—Constantius Chlorus, the father of Constantine, abandoned the absurdities of Paganism, and treated the Christians with great respect. This alarmed the Pagan priests, whose interests were so closely connected with the continuance of the ancient superstitions, and who apprehended that to their great detriment the Christian religion would become daily more universal and triumphant throughout the empire. Under these anxious fears they moved Dioclesian to persecute the Christians. Hence began what is termed the tenth and last general persecution, which was the most severe of all, and continued nearly ten years (See Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History of the Third Century:) and as it was the Divine pleasure that at this time a great deliverer should be raised up in behalf of His suffering people; the woman, or Christian church, is very appropriately represented as overtaken with the pangs of labour, and ready to be delivered. Before the death of Constantius, the Heathen party, aware that Constantine would follow the example of his father, who so much favoured the Christians, beheld him with a watchful and malignant eye. Many were the snares that, according to Eusebius, were laid for him by Maximin and Galerius: he relates the frequent and dangerous enterprises to which they urged him, with the design that he might lose his life. When Galerius heard of the death of Constantius, and that he had appointed Constantine his successor, he was filled with the most ungovernable rage and indignation; notwithstanding he did not dare to take any steps contrary to the interest of Constantine: the dread of the armies of the west, which were mostly composed of Christians, was a sufficient check to all attempts of that kind. Thus the dragon, or Heathen power, stood before the woman, or Christian church, to devour her son, or deliverer; as soon as he was born.—See Dr. Mitchell's Exposition of the Revelation in loc.

Verse 5. And she brought forth a man child—The Christian church, when her full time came, obtained a deliverer, who, in the course of the Divine providence, was destined

To rule all nations—The Heathen Roman empire,

With a rod of iron—A strong figure to denote the very great restraint that should be put upon Paganism, so that it should not be able longer to persecute the Christian church. The man child mentioned in this verse is the dynasty of Christian emperors, beginning with Constantine's public acknowledgment of his belief in the divinity of the Christian religion, which happened in the latter part of A. D. 312, after the defeat of the emperor Maxentius.

And her child was caught up unto God and to his throne.—A succession of Christian emperors was raised up to the church; for the Roman throne, as Bishop Newton observes, is here called the throne of God, because there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God.

Verse 6. And the woman fled into the wilderness.—The account of the woman's flying into the wilderness immediately follows that of her child being caught up to the throne of God, to denote the great and rapid increase of heresies in the Christian church after the time that Christianity was made the religion of the empire.

Where she hath a place prepared of God—See on verse 14.

Verse 7. And there was war in heaven—As heaven means here the throne of the Roman empire, the war in heaven consequently alludes to the breaking out of civil commotions among the governors of this empire.

Michael and his angels fought against the dragon—Michael was the man child which the woman brought forth, as is evident from the context; and therefore signifies, as has been shown already, the dynasty of Christian Roman emperors. This dynasty is represented by Michael, because he is "the great prince which standeth for the children of God's people." Dan. xii. 1.

And the dragon fought and his angels—Or ministers,

Verse 8. And prevailed not—Against the cause of Christianity.

Neither was their place found any more in heaven—The advocates of the Heathen idolatry were prevented from having any further share in the government of the empire. The wonderful success of Constantine over all his enemies, and his final triumph over Licinius, correspond exactly to the symbolical language of this verse.

Verse 9. And the great dragon was cast out, &c.—By the terms devil and Satan mentioned in this verse, Pareus, Faber, and many other commentators, understand literally the great spiritual enemy of mankind. But this view of the passage cannot be correct; from the circumstance that it is the dragon which is thus called. Now, if by the dragon be meant the devil; then we are necessarily led to this conclusion, that the great apostate spirit is a monster, having seven heads and ten horns, and also that he has a tail, with which he drags after him the third part of the stars of heaven. The appellations old serpent, devil, and Satan, must, therefore, be understood figuratively. The Heathen power is called that old serpent which deceiveth the whole world, from its subtlety against the Christians, and its causing the whole Roman world, as far as it was in his power, to embrace the absurdities of Paganism. It is called the devil, from its continual false accusations and slanders against the true worshippers of God; for the devil is a liar from the beginning; and it is also called Satan שטן, which is a Hebrew word signifying an adversary, from its frequent persecutions of the Christian church. The dragon and his angels are said to be cast out; which is more than was said in the preceding verse. There, mention is made of his being found no longer in heaven, or on the throne of the Roman empire; here, he is entirely cast out from all offices of trust in the empire: his religion is first only tolerated, and then totally abolished, by the imperial power. This great event was not the work of a reign; it took up many years; for it had to contend with the deep-rooted prejudices of the Heathen, who to the very last endeavoured to uphold their declining superstition. Paganism received several mortal strokes in the time of Constantine and his sons Constans and Constantius. It was farther reduced by the great zeal of Jovian, Valentinian, and Valens; and was finally suppressed by the edicts of Gratian, Theodosius I. and his successors. It was not till A. D. 388, that Rome itself, the residence of the emperor, was generally reformed from the absurdities of Paganism: but the total suppression of Paganism soon followed the conversion of the metropolitan city; and about A. D. 395, the dragon may be considered, in an eminent sense, to have been cast into the earth, that is, into a state of utter subjection to the ruling dynasty of Christian emperors.

Verse 10. And I heard a loud voice, saying,—Now is come salvation, &c.—This is a song of triumph of the Christian church over the Heathen idolatry; and is very expressive of the great joy of the Christians upon this most stupendous event. The loud voice of triumph is said to be heard in heaven; to show that the Christian religion was now exalted to the heaven or throne of the Roman empire. "It is very remarkable," as Bishop Newton observes, "that Constantine himself, and the Christians of his time, describe his conquests under the image of a dragon; as if they had understood that this prophecy had received its accomplishment in him. Constantine himself, in his epistle to Eusebius and other bishops concerning the re-edifying and repairing of the churches, saith that 'liberty being now restored, and that the dragon being removed from the administration of public affairs, by the providence of the great God, and by my ministry; I esteem the great power of God to have been made manifest to all.' Moreover, a picture of Constantine was set up over the palace-gate, with the cross over his head, and under his feet the great enemy of mankind, who persecuted the church by means of impious tyrants, in the form of a dragon, transfixed with a dart through the midst of his body, and falling headlong into the depth of the sea."—See Eusebius de Vitâ Constantini, lib. ii. c. 46. and lib. iii. c. 3. and Socratis Hist. Eccles. lib. i. c. 9. Constantine added to the other Roman ensigns the labarum, or standard of the cross, and constituted it the principal standard of the Christian Roman empire. To this labarum Prudentius refers, when speaking of the Christian soldiers, in his first hymn περι στεφανων,

Cæsaris vexilla linquunt, eligunt SIGNUM CRUCIS,
Proque ventosis Draconum, quæ gerebant, palliis, Proferunt INSIGNE LIGNUM, quod Draconem subdidit.

"They leave the ensigns of Cæsar; they choose the standard of the cross; and instead of the dragon-flags which they carried, moved about with the wind, they bring forward the illustrious wood that subdued the dragon."

When the apostle saw the woman in heaven, well might he call it, in the spirit of prophecy, a great wonder.

Verse 11. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb—Here is given the reason why the followers of Christ prevailed at this time against all their adversaries. It was because they fought against the dragon in the armour of God. They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, by proclaiming salvation to sinners through Christ crucified, and by their continual intercession at the Throne of grace for the conversion of the Heathen world.

And by the word of their testimony.—By constantly testifying against the errors and follies of mankind.

And they loved not their lives unto the death.—They regarded not their present temporal estate, but even gladly delivered up their lives to the fury of their persecutors, and thus sealed the truth of what they spake with their blood.

Verse 12. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them.—Let the Christians, who are now partakers of the present temporal prosperity, and advanced to places of trust in the empire, praise and magnify the Lord who has thus so signally interfered in their behalf. But it is added—

Wo to the inhabiters of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you.—By the inhabiters of the earth are meant the people in subjection to the Roman empire; and by the sea, those parts of the Roman dominions appear to be intended that were reduced to a state of anarchy by the incursions of the barbarous nations. It is not without precedent to liken great hosts of nations combined together to the sea.—See Ezek. xxvi. 3. Here, then, is a wo denounced against the whole Roman world, which will be excited by the devil, the father of lies, the Heathen party being thus denominated from the method they pursued in their endeavours to destroy the religion of Jesus.—See on ver. 15.

Having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.—The Christian religion, the Pagan party see with great regret, is rapidly gaining ground every where; and, if not timely checked, must soon brave all opposition.

Verse 13. And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth—When the Heathen party saw that they were no longer supported by the civil power—

He persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child.—The Heathens persecuted the Christian church, in the behalf of which Divine Providence had raised up a dynasty of Christian Roman emperors.

Verse 14. And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle—Τȣ ἀετȣ τȣ μεγαλȣ, of THE great eagle. The great eagle here mentioned is an emblem of the Roman empire in general; and, therefore, differs from the dragon, which is a symbol of the HEATHEN ROMAN empire in particular. The Roman power is called an eagle from its legionary standard, which was introduced among the Romans in the second year of the consulate of C. Marius; for, before that time, minotaurs, wolves, leopards, horses, boars, and eagles, were used indifferently, according to the humour of the commander. The Roman eagles were figures in relievo, of silver or gold, borne on the tops of pikes; the wings being displayed, and frequently a thunderbolt in their talons. Under the eagle, on the pike, were piled bucklers, and sometimes crowns. The two wings of the great eagle refer to the two grand independent divisions of the Roman empire, which took place January 17, A. D. 395; and were given to the woman, Christianity being the established religion of both empires.

That she might fly into the wilderness into her place, &c.—The apparent repetition here of what is said in ver. 6. has induced Bishop Newton to consider the former passage as introduced by way of prolepsis, or anticipation; for, says he, the woman did not fly into the wilderness till several years after the conversion of Constantine. But that there is no such prolepsis as the bishop imagines, is evident from the ecclesiastical history of the fourth century; for the woman, or true church, began to flee into the wilderness a considerable time before the division of the great Roman empire into two independent monarchies. The word translated fled, is not to be taken in that peculiar sense, as if the woman, in the commencement of her flight, had been furnished with wings, for the original word is ἐφυγεν. The meaning, therefore, of verses 6 and 14, when taken in connexion with their respective contexts, is, that the woman began to make rapid strides towards the desert almost immediately after her elevation to the heaven, or throne, of the Roman empire; and in the course of her flight was furnished with the wings of the great eagle ἱνα πετηται, that she might FLY into that place prepared of God, where she should be fed a thousand two hundred and threescore days. It is said here that the period for which the woman should be nourished in the wilderness, would be a time, times, and a half; consequently, this period is the same with the twelve hundred and sixty days of ver. 6. But in no other sense can they be considered the same than by understanding a time to signify a year; times, two years; and half a time, half a year: i. e. three years and a half. And as each prophetic year contains three hundred and sixty days, so three years and a half will contain precisely twelve hundred and sixty days. The Apocalypse being highly symbolical, it is reasonable to expect that its periods of time will also be represented symbolically, that the prophecy may be homogeneous in all its parts. The Holy Spirit, when speaking of years symbolically, has invariably represented them by days, commanding, ex. gr. the prophet Ezekiel to lie upon his left side three hundred and ninety days, that it might be a sign or symbol of the house of Israel bearing their iniquity as many years; and forty days upon his right side, to represent to the house of Judah in a symbolical manner, that they should bear their iniquity forty years. The one thousand two hundred and threescore days, therefore, that the woman is fed in the wilderness, must be understood symbolically; and, consequently, denote as many natural years. The wilderness into which the woman flies is the Greek and Latin worlds, for she is conveyed into her place by means of the two wings of the great eagle. We must not understand the phrase flying into her place, of her removing from one part of the habitable world into another; but of her speedy declension from a state of great prosperity to a forlorn and desolate condition. The woman is nourished for one thousand two hundred and threescore years from the face of the serpent. The empires of the East and West were destined, in the course of the Divine Providence, to support the Christian religion, at least nominally, while the rest of the world should remain in Pagan idolatry, or under the influence of the dragon, here called the serpent, because he deceiveth the whole world. The words of the prophecy are very remarkable. The Christian church is said to be supported by the eastern and western empires, two mighty dominations, and at the same time situated in the wilderness, strongly denoting that though many professed Christianity, there were but very few who "kept the commandments of God, and had the testimony of Jesus Christ."

Verse 15. And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood.—The water here evidently means great multitudes of nations and people; for in chap. xvii. 15. the interpreting angel says, The waters which thou sawest—are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. This water, then, which the dragon cast out of his mouth, must be an inundation of Heathen barbarous nations upon the Roman empire; and the purpose which the dragon has in view by this inundation is, that he might cause the woman, or Christian church—

To be carried away of the flood.—Entirely swept away from the face of the earth. Dr. Mosheim, in the commencement of his second chapter upon the fifth century, observes, "that the Goths, the Heruli, the Franks, the Huns, and the Vandals, with other fierce and warlike nations, for the most part strangers to Christianity, had invaded the Roman empire, and rent it asunder in the most deplorable manner. Amidst these calamities the Christians were grievous, nay, we may venture to say, the principal sufferers. It is true these savage nations were much more intent upon the acquisition of wealth and dominion, than upon the propagation or support of the Pagan superstitions; nor did their cruelty and opposition to the Christians arise from any religious principle, or from an enthusiastic desire to ruin the cause of Christianity: it was merely by the INSTIGATION of the Pagans, who remained yet in the empire, that they were excited to treat with such severity and violence the followers of Christ." Thus the wo, which was denounced ver. 12, against the inhabiters of the earth and of the sea, came upon the whole Roman world; for, in consequence of the excitement and malicious misrepresentations of the Pagans of the empire, "a transmigration of a great swarm of nations" came upon the Romans, and ceased not their ravages till they had desolated the eastern empire, even as far as the gates of Byzantium; and finally possessed themselves of the western empire. "If," says Dr. Robertson, in the introduction to his History of Charles V. Vol. I. pp. 11, 12. edit. Lond. 1809, "a man were called to fix upon the period in the history of the world, during which the condition of the human race was most calamitous and afflicted; he would, without hesitation, name that which elapsed from the death of Theodosius the Great, to the establishment of the Lombards in Italy, a period of one hundred and seventy-six years. The contemporary authors who beheld that scene of desolation, labour and are at a loss for expressions to describe the horror of it. The scourge of God, the destroyer of nations, are the dreadful epithets by which they distinguish the most noted of the barbarous leaders; and they compare the ruin which they had brought on the world to the havoc occasioned by earthquakes, conflagrations or deluges, the most formidable and fatal calamities which the imagination of man can conceive." But the subtle design which the serpent or dragon had in view, when he vomited out of his mouth a flood of waters, was most providentially frustrated; for—

Verse 16. The earth helped the woman—"Nothing indeed," as Bishop Newton excellently observes, "was more likely to produce the ruin and utter subversion of the Christian church, than the irruptions of so many barbarous nations into the Roman empire. But the event proved contrary to human appearance and expectation: the earth swallowed up the flood; the barbarians were rather swallowed up by the Romans, than the Romans by the barbarians; the Heathen conquerors, instead of imposing their own, submitted to the religion of the conquered Christians; and they not only embraced the religion, but affected even the laws, the manners, the customs, the language, and the very name of Romans, so that the victors were in a manner absorbed and lost among the vanquished." See his Dissertations on the Prophecies, in loc.

Verse 17. And the dragon was wroth with the woman.—The Heathen party, foiled in their subtle attempt to destroy Christianity, were greatly enraged, and endeavoured to excite the hatred of the multitude against the religion of Jesus. "They alleged that before the coming of Christ, the world was blessed with peace and prosperity; but that, since the progress of their religion every where, the gods, filled with indignation to see their worship neglected, and their altars abandoned, had visited the earth with those plagues and desolations which increased every day." See Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, Cent. V. Part 1. and other works on this subject.

Went to make war with the remnant of her seed—The dragon απηλθε departed, i. e. into the wilderness, whither the woman had fled; and, in another form, commenced a new species of persecution, directed only against the remnant of her seed, who keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ. See on verse 13 of the following chapter for an illustration of this remarkable passage.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIII.

By J. E. C.

Verse 1. And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea] Before we can proceed in the interpretation of this chapter, it will be highly necessary to ascertain the meaning of the prophetic symbol beast, as the want of a proper understanding of this term has probably been one reason why so many discordant hypotheses have been published to the world. In this investigation, it is impossible to resort to a higher authority than Scripture; for the Holy Ghost is His own Interpreter. What is, therefore, meant by the term beast in any one prophetic vision, the same species of thing must be represented by the term whenever it is used in a similar manner in any other part of the Sacred Oracles. Having, therefore, laid this foundation, the angel's interpretation of the last of Daniel's four beasts need only be produced, an account of which is given in the seventh chapter of this prophet. Daniel being very desirous to "know the truth of the fourth beast which was diverse from all the others, exceeding dreadful, and of the ten horns that were on his head," the angel thus interprets the vision:—"The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces. And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise," &c. In this Scripture it is plainly declared that the fourth beast should be the fourth kingdom upon earth; consequently, the four beasts seen by Daniel are four kingdoms: hence the term beast is the prophetic symbol for a kingdom.

As to the nature of the kingdom which is represented by the term beast: we shall obtain no inconsiderable light in examining the most proper meaning of the original word חיה chaiyah. This Hebrew word is translated in the Septuagint by the Greek word θηριον, and both words signify what we term a wild beast; and the latter is the one used by St. John in the Apocalypse. Taking up the Greek word θηριον in this sense, it is fully evident, if a power be represented in the prophetical writings under the notion of a wild beast, that the power so represented must partake of the nature of a wild beast. Hence an earthly belligerent power is evidently designed. And the comparison is peculiarly appropriate; for, as several species of wild beasts carry on perpetual warfare with the animal world; so most governments, influenced by ambition, promote discord and depopulation. And, also, as the carnivorous wild beast acquires its strength and magnitude by preying upon the feebler animals; so most earthly monarchies are raised up by the sword, and derive their political consequence from the unsuccessful resistance of the contending nations. The kingdom of God, on the other hand, is represented as "a stone cut out of the mountain without hands;" and is never likened to a beast, because it is not raised up by the sword, as all other secular powers are; but sanctifies the persons under its subjection, in which last particular it essentially differs from all other dominations.

This beast is said to rise up out of the sea, in which particular it corresponds with the four beasts of Daniel; the sea is, therefore, the symbol of a great multitude of nations, as has already been proved; and the meaning is, that every mighty empire is raised upon the ruins of a great number of nations, against which it has successfully contended, and incorporated with its dominions. The sea, here, is doubtless the same, against the inhabiters of which a wo was denounced, chap. xii. 12. for St. John was standing upon the sand of the sea, when the vision changed from the woman and the dragon to that recorded in this chapter. It therefore follows, that the kingdom or empire here represented by the beast, is that which sprung up out of the ruins of the WESTERN Roman empire.

Having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns] The beast here described is the Latin empire, which supported the Romish or Latin church; for it has upon his horns ten crowns; i. e. is an empire composed of ten distinct monarchies in the interest of the Latin church.—See the heads and horns fully explained in the Notes on chap. xvii. 10, 12, 16.

As the phrases Latin church, Latin empire, &c. are not very generally understood at present, and will occur frequently in the course of the Notes on this and the xviith chapter, it will not be improper here to explain them.—During the period from the division of the Roman empire into those of the East and West, till the final dissolution of the western empire; the subjects of both empires were equally known by the name of Romans. Soon after this event the people of the West lost almost entirely the name of Romans, and were denominated after their respective kingdoms which were established upon the ruins of the western empire. But as the eastern empire escaped the ruin which fell upon the western; the subjects of the former still retained the name of Romans, and called their dominion Ἡ Ρωμαϊκη βασιλεια, the Roman empire; by which name this monarchy was known among them till its final dissolution in 1453, by Mohammed II. the Turkish sultan. But the subjects of the eastern emperor, ever since the time of Charlemagne, or before, (and more particularly in the time of the Crusades, and subsequently,) called the western people, or those under the influence of the Romish church, Latins; and their church, the Latin church. And the western people, in return, denominated the eastern church the Greek church, and the members of it Greeks. Hence the division of the Christian church into those of the Greek and Latin. For a confirmation of what has just been said, the Reader may consult the Byzantine writers, where he will find the appellations Ρωμαιοι and Λατινοι, Romans and Latins, used in the sense here mentioned in very numerous instances. The members of the Romish church have not been named Latins by the Greeks alone: this term is also used in the public instruments drawn up by the general Popish councils, as may be instanced in the following words, which form a part of a decree of the council of Basil, dated Sept. 26, 1437, "copiosissimam subventionem pro unione GRÆCORUM cum LATINIS," a very great convention for the union of the Greeks with the Latins. Even in the very Papal bulls this appellation has been acknowledged, as may be seen in the edict of Pope Eugenius IV. dated Sept. 17, 1437, where in one place mention is made of "Ecclesiæ LATINORUM—quæsita unio," the desired union of the church of the Latins: and in another place we read, "Nec superesse modum alium prosequendi operis tam pii, et servandi LATINÆ ECCLESIÆ honoris," that no means might be left untried of prosecuting so pious a work, and of preserving the honour of the Latin church.—See Corps Diplomatique, Tom. III. pp. 32, 35. In a bull of the same pontiff, dated Sept. 1439, we have "Sanctissima LATINORUM et GRÆCORUM unio," the most holy union of the Greeks with the Latins.—See Bail's Summa Conciliorum, in loc. By the Latin empire is meant the whole of the powers which support the Latin church.

And upon his heads the name of blasphemy] Ονομα βλασφημιας, a name of blasphemy. This has been variously understood: Jerome and Prosper give it as their opinion that the name of blasphemy consists in the appellation urbs æterna, eternal city, applied to Rome; and modern commentators refer it to the idolatrous worship of the Romans and Papists. Before we attempt to ascertain the meaning of this passage, it must be first defined what the Holy Spirit means by a name of blasphemy. Blasphemy, in Scripture, signifies impious speaking, when applied to GOD; and injurious speaking, when directed against our neighbour. A name of blasphemy is the prostitution of a sacred name to an unholy purpose. This is evident from the 9th verse of the second chapter of the Apocalypse, where God says, "I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan." These wicked men, by calling themselves Jews, blasphemed the name, i. e. used it in an injurious sense; for he ONLY is a Jew who is one inwardly. Hence the term Jews applied to the synagogue of Satan, is a name of blasphemy, i. e. a sacred name blasphemed. A name of blasphemy, or a blasphemous appellation, is said to be upon all the seven heads of the beast. To determine what this name is, the meaning of the seven heads in this place must be ascertained. If the Reader refer to the Notes on chap. xvii. 9, 10, 11. he will find that the heads are explained to have a double meaning, viz. that they signify the seven electorates of the German empire, and also seven forms of Latin government. As this is the first place in which the heads of the beast are mentioned with any description; it is reasonable to expect that that signification of the heads which is first in order in the angel's interpretation, chap. xvii. 9. must be what is here intended. This is, "the seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth:" the name of blasphemy will, consequently, be found upon the seven electorates of Germany. This, therefore, can be no other than that which was common not only to the electorates, but also to the whole empire of Germany, or that well known one of SACRUM Imperium Romanum, "The SACRED (or HOLY) Roman empire." Here is a sacred appellation blasphemed by its application to the principal power of the beast. No kingdom can properly be called holy but that of Jesus; therefore it would be blasphemy to unite this epithet with any other power. But it must be horridly blasphemous to apply it to the German empire, the grand supporter of antichrist from his very rise to temporal authority. Can that empire be holy which has killed the saints, which has professed and supported with all its might an idolatrous system of worship? It is impossible. Therefore its assumption of sacred, or holy, (which appellation was originally given to the empire from its being the main support of what is termed the holy Catholic church, the emperor being styled, on this account, Christ's temporal vicar upon earth: see Cæsarini Fürstenerii Tractatus De Suprematu Principum Germaniæ, cc. 31, 32.) is, in the highest sense the words can be taken, a name of blasphemy. The name of blasphemy is very properly said to be upon the seven heads of the beast, or seven electorates of the German empire, because the electors are styled SACRI Imperii Principes Electores, Princes, Electors of the Holy empire; SACRI Romani Imperii Electores, Electors of the Holy Roman empire.

Verse 2. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard] This similitude of the beast to a leopard appears to be an allusion to the third beast of Daniel, which is well known to represent the empire of the Greeks. The Latin empire greatly resembled the modern empire of the Greeks; for, that the power of the Greeks was still said to be like a leopard, even after its subjugation by the Romans, is evident from the 12th verse of the seventh chapter of Daniel, "As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away, yet their lives were prolonged for a season and time." The Latin empire was, in the first place, like to its contemporary, because both adhered to an idolatrous system of worship, professedly Christian, but really antichristian; and it is well known that the Greek and Latin churches abound in monstrous absurdities. Secondly, both empires were similar in their opposition to the spread of pure Christianity; though it must be allowed that the Latins far outstripped the Greeks in this particular. Thirdly, both empires were similar in respect to the civil authority being powerfully depressed by the ecclesiastical; though it must be granted the authority of the Latin church was more strongly marked, and of much longer continuance. The excommunication of the Greek emperor by the patriarch Arsenius, and the consequences of that excommunication, afford a remarkable example of the great power of the Greek clergy. But the beast of Saint John, though in its general appearance it resembles a leopard, yet differs from it in having feet like those of a bear. The second beast of Daniel was likened to a bear, and there can be no doubt that the kingdom of the Medes and Persians was intended; and it is very properly likened to this animal, because it was one of the most inhuman governments that ever existed; and a bear is the well-known Scripture emblem of cruelty.—See 2 Sam. xvii. 8. and Hos. xiii. 8. Is not cruelty a striking characteristic of the Papal Latin empire? Have not the subjects of this empire literally trampled to death all those in their power, who would not obey their idolatrous requisitions? In Fox's Book of Martyrs, and other works which treat upon this subject, will be found a melancholy catalogue of the horrid tortures and most lingering deaths which they have obliged great numbers of Christians to suffer. In this sense, the feet of the beast were as the feet of a bear. Another particular in which the beast differed from a leopard, was in having a mouth like a lion. "It is," says Dr. More, "like the Babylonish kingdom (the first beast of Daniel, which is likened to a lion,) in its cruel decrees against such as will not obey their idolatrous edicts, nor worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar had set up. Their stubbornness must be punished by a hot fiery furnace; fire and fagot must be prepared for them that will not submit to this New Roman idolatry."

And the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority.] It was said of the dragon in chap. xii. 8. that his place was found no more in heaven; the dragon here cannot, therefore, be the Heathen Roman empire, as this was abolished previously to the rising up of the beast. It must then allude to the restoration of one of the DRACONIC heads of the beast, as will be seen in the explanation of the following verse, and more fully in the Notes on chap. xvii.

Verse 3. And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death] This is the second and last place where the heads of the beast are mentioned with any description; and, therefore, the meaning here must be forms of government, as these were noticed last in the angel's double explanation. The head that was wounded to death can be no other than the seventh draconic head, which was the sixth head of the beast, viz. the imperial power; for "this head," as Bishop Newton observes, "was, as it were, wounded to death, when the Roman empire was overturned by the northern nations, and which gave power unto the beast; and they worshipped the beast, saying, [a] Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him?

an end was put to the very name of emperor in Momyllus Augustulus." It was so wounded that it was wholly improbable that it could ever rise again to considerable power; for the western empire came into the possession of several barbarous nations of independent interests.

And his deadly wound was healed] This was effected by Charlemagne, who, with his successors, assumed all the marks of the ancient emperors of the West, with the titles of Semper Augustus, Sacred Majesty, First Prince of the Christian world, Temporal Chief of the Christian people, and Rector or Temporal Chief of the Faithful in Germany: Mod. Universal History, Vol. XXXII. p. 79. But it is said in ver. 9, that the dragon gave the beast his power, δυναμιν, his armies, or military strength; i. e. he employed all his imperial power in defence of the Latin empire, which supported the Latin church. He also gave his seat, θρονον, literally his throne, to him; that is, his whole empire formed an integral part of the Latin empire, by its conversion to the Roman Catholic faith. He also gave him great authority. This is literally true of the Roman empire of Germany, which, by its great power and influence in the politics of Europe, extended the religion of the empire over the various states and monarchies of Europe; thus incorporating them, as it were, in one vast empire, by uniting them in one common faith.

And all the world wondered after the beast] Ὁλην τὴν γην, all the earth. As the original word signifies earth, and not world, as in our translation, the Latin world, which is the earth of the beast, is here intended; and the meaning of the passage consequently is, that the whole body of the Roman Catholics were affected with great astonishment at the mighty sway of the Latin empire, considering it as a great and holy power.

Verse 4. And they worshipped the dragon] Worshipping the dragon here evidently means the voluntary religious subjection of the members of the Latin church to the revived western empire, because of the eminent part it has taken in the support of their faith.

And they worshipped the beast] Not only the dragon, or revived western empire, was worshipped; the beast, the whole Latin empire, is a partaker in the adoration. The manner in which it is worshipped consists in the subjects of it—

Saying, Who is like unto the beast?] Is it not the only holy power in the universe? Is it possible for any person not a subject of it to be saved?

Who is able to make war with him?] Can any nation successfully fight with it? Is not the Roman empire, which is its most principal bulwark, invictissimum, most invincible? Invictissimus, most invincible, was the peculiar attribute of the emperors of Germany. See Modern Universal History, Vol. XXXII. p. 197.

Verse 5. And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things] That is, there was given to the rulers of the Latin empire, who are the mouth of the beast, (and particularly the Roman emperors of Germany,) power to assume great and pompous titles, indicative of their mighty sway over many subjugated countries, (see the imperial instruments of the middle centuries in the Corps Diplomatique:) and also to utter against their opponents the most terrible edicts.

And blasphemies] The system of worship supported by the beast is a system of blasphemy; as there will be occasion to show presently.

And power was given unto him to continue forty and two months] As these forty-two months are prophetic, they must mean so many years as there are days contained in them; viz. 1260, each month containing 30 days. The beast, therefore, will continue in existence at least 1260 years: but when the termination of this period will take place, is difficult to say; as the beginning cannot be at present indubitably ascertained.

Verse 6. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name] The Latin empire is here represented as a blasphemous power in three respects: first, he blasphemes the name of God. This has been most notoriously the case with the different Popish princes, who continually blaspheme the sacred names of God, by using them in their idolatrous worship. The mouth of blasphemy against God cannot be more evident than in the following impious words which form a part of the Golden Bull published by Charles IV. in January, 1356: "But thou, envy, how often hast thou attempted to ruin by division the Christian empire, which God hath founded upon the three cardinal virtues, faith, hope, and charity, as upon a holy and indivisible Trinity; vomiting the old venom of discord among the seven electors, who are the pillars and seven principal members of the holy empire; by the brightness of whom the holy empire ought to be illuminated as by seven torches, the light of which is reinforced by the seven gifts of the Holy Spirit."

And his tabernacle] Tabernacle is any kind of dwelling-place; and, in an eminent sense among the Jews, was a kind of tent to take up and down, as occasion required; which was, as it were, the palace of the Most High, the dwelling of the God of Israel. It was divided into two partitions, one called The Holy Place, and the other The Most Holy Place; in the latter of which, before the building of the temple, the ark of the covenant was kept, which was a symbol of God's gracious presence with the Jewish church. All this the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, in the eighth and ninth chapters, explains to prefigure the human nature of Christ. The beast's blasphemy of the tabernacle of God is, therefore, as Dr. More and others properly observe, his impious doctrine of transubstantiation, in which it is most blasphemously asserted that the substance of the bread and wine in the sacrament, is literally converted by the consecration of the priest, into the very body and blood of Jesus Christ! This doctrine was first advanced among the Latins, in the tenth century; and in 1215 fully received as an article of the Roman Catholic faith. It is for the pages of ecclesiastical history to record the incredible numbers which have been martyred by the Papists for their non-reception of this most unscriptural and antichristian doctrine.

And them that dwell in heaven.] By heaven is here meant the throne of God, and not the throne of the beast, because it is against God the beast blasphemes. This must, therefore, allude to his impious adoration of the saints and angels, whose residence is in heaven. He blasphemes against God by paying that adoration to the celestial inhabitants which belongs to God alone. That this sort of worship has been, and still is, kept up among the Roman Catholics, their mass-book is a sufficient evidence.

Verse 7. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them] "Who can make any computation," says Bishop Newton, "or even frame any conception, of the numbers of pious Christians who have fallen a sacrifice to the bigotry and cruelty of Rome? Mede upon the place hath observed, from good authorities, that in the war with the Albigenses and Waldenses there perished of these poor creatures, in France alone, a million. From the first institution of the Jesuits, to the year 1580, that is, in little more than thirty years, nine hundred thousand Orthodox Christians were slain, and these all by the common executioner. In the space of scarce thirty years the inquisition destroyed, by various kinds of torture, a hundred and fifty thousand Christians. Sanders himself confesses, that an innumerable multitude of Lollards and Sacramentarians were burnt throughout all Europe; who yet, he says, were not put to death by the Pope and bishops, but by the civil magistrates." The dragon, in a new shape, or Roman empire of Germany, acted a very conspicuous part in this nefarious warfare against the remnant of the woman's seed, who kept the commandments of God, and had the testimony of Jesus Christ.—See the imperial edict of Frederic II. against heretics, in Limborch's History of the Inquisition.

And power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations] As the Book of the Revelation is a prophecy of all that should come upon the Christian world till the end of time; all kindreds, and tongues, and nations, must imply the whole Christian world. That the Latin empire, in the course of its reign, has had the extensive power here spoken of, is evident from history. It is well known that the profession of Christianity was chiefly confined within the limits of the Greek and Latin empires, till the period of the Reformation. By means of the Crusades, the Latins extended their empire over several provinces of the Greeks. In 1097, Baldwin extended his conquests over the hills of Armenia, and the plain of Mesopotamia, and founded the first principality of the Franks or Latins; which subsisted fifty-four years beyond the Euphrates. In 1204 the Greeks were expelled Constantinople by the Latins, who set up an empire there which continued about fifty-seven years. The total overthrow of the Latin states in the East soon followed the recovery of Constantinople by the Greeks; and in 1291 the Latin empire in the East was entirely dissolved. Thus the Latins have had power over the whole world professedly Christian: but it is not said that the whole world was in utter subjection to him, for we read in the following verse—

Verse 8. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb] The earth here is the Latin world, as has been observed before in similar cases. The meaning, therefore, is, that all the corrupt part of mankind, who are inhabitants of the Latin world, shall submit to the religion of the empire, except, as Bishop Newton expresses it, "those faithful few, whose names, as citizens of heaven, were enrolled in the registers of life."

Slain from the foundation of the world.] That is, of the Christian world; for this has been shown to be the meaning of all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. The year of the crucifixion is properly the commencement of Christianity, as the apostles then first began to promulgate the religion of Christ with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. But as Jesus Christ was in the Divine purpose appointed from the foundation of the world to redeem man by His blood, He therefore is, in a very eminent sense, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, i. e. from the creation.

Verse 9. If any man have an ear, let him hear.] These words are evidently introduced to impress the Reader with the awfulness of what has just been spoken, all shall worship him whose names are not written in the book of life; as well as to fix his attention upon the following words:—

Verse 10. He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity] The Latin empire here spoken of must go into captivity, because it has led into captivity, by not only propagating among the various nations its abominable antichristian system, but also in compelling them to embrace it under penalty of forfeiting the protection of the empire.

He that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword] The Latin empire must be also broken to pieces by the sword, because it has killed the saints of God. This prophecy will not receive its full accomplishment till the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ.

Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.] By these words, as Dr. Mitchell observes, "God calls upon His saints to keep in view, under all their persecutions, His retributive justice: there is no violence that has been exercised upon them but what shall be retaliated upon the cruel and persecuting government and governors of the Latin empire."

Verse 11. And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth] As a beast has already been shown to be the symbol of a kingdom or empire, the rising up of this second beast must, consequently, represent the rising up of another empire. This beast comes up out of the earth; therefore it is totally different from the preceding, which rose up out of the sea. Earth here means the Latin world, for this word has been shown to import this already in several instances; the rising up of the beast out of this earth must, consequently, represent the springing up of some power out of a state of subjection to the Latin empire: therefore the beast, here called another beast, is another LATIN empire. This beast is the spiritual Latin empire, or, in other words, the Romish hierarchy; for with no other power can the prophetic description, yet to be examined, be shown to accord. In the time of Charlemagne, the ecclesiastical power was in subjection to the civil; and it continued to be so for a long time after his death: therefore the beast, whose deadly wound was healed, ruled over the whole Latin world, both clergy and laity; these, consequently, constituted but one beast or empire. But the Latin clergy kept continually gaining more and more influence in the civil affairs of the empire; and in the tenth century their authority was greatly increased. In the subsequent centuries the power of the Romish hierarchy ascended even above that of the emperors; and led into captivity the kings of the whole Latin world, as there will be occasion to show in commenting upon the following verses. Thus the Romish hierarchy was at length entirely exempted from the civil power, and constituted another beast, as it became entirely independent of the secular Latin empire. And this beast came up out of the earth; that is, the Latin clergy, which composed a part of the earth, or Latin world, raised their authority against that of the secular powers; and, in process of time, wrested the superintendence of ecclesiastical affairs from the secular princes.

And he had two horns] As the seven-headed beast is represented as having ten horns, which signifies so many kingdoms leagued together to support the Latin church; so the beast which rises out of the earth has also two horns, which must, consequently, represent two kingdoms, for if horns of a beast mean kingdoms in one part of the Apocalypse, kingdoms must be intended by this symbol whenever it is used in a similar way in any other part of this book. As the second beast is the spiritual Latin empire, the two horns of this beast denote that the empire thus represented is composed of two distinct spiritual powers. These, therefore, can be no other, as Bishop Newton and Faber properly observe, than the two grand independent branches of the Romish hierarchy, viz. the Latin clergy, REGULAR and SECULAR. "The first of these comprehends all the various monastic orders; the second comprehends the whole body of parochial clergy." These two grand branches of the hierarchy originally constituted but one dominion, as the monks as well as the other clergy were in subjection to the bishops: but the subjection of the monks to their diocesans became by degrees less apparent; and in process of time, through the influence and authority of the Roman pontiffs, they were entirely exempted from all episcopal jurisdiction, and thus became a spiritual power, entirely independent of that of the secular clergy.

Like a lamb] As lamb, in other parts of the Apocalypse, evidently means Christ, who is the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world, it must have a similar import in this passage: therefore the meaning here is evidently that the two horns of the beast, or the regular and secular clergy, profess to be the ministers of Christ; to be like Him in meekness and humility; and to teach nothing that is contrary to godliness. The two-horned beast, or spiritual Latin empire, has in reality the name, and in the eyes of the Latin world the appearance, of a CHRISTIAN power. But he is only so in appearance, and that alone among his deluded votaries; for when he spake,

He spake as a dragon] The doctrines of the Romish hierarchy are very similar to those contained in the old Heathen worship; for he has introduced "a new species of idolatry nominally different, but essentially the same, the worship of angels and saints instead of the gods and demigods of antiquity."

Verse 12. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him] In the preceding verse the two-horned beast was represented as rising out of the earth, that is, obtaining gradually more and more influence in the civil affairs of the Latin world. Here he is represented as having obtained the direction and management of all the power of the first beast, or secular Latin empire, before him, ενωπιον αυτου, in his presence. That the Romish hierarchy has had the extensive power here spoken of, is evident from history: for the civil power was in subjection to the ecclesiastical. The parochial clergy, one of the horns of the second beast, have had great secular jurisdiction over the whole Latin world. Two-thirds of the estates of Germany were given by the three Othos, who succeeded each other, to ecclesiastics; and in the other Latin monarchies the parochial clergy possessed great temporal power. Yet extraordinary as the power of the secular clergy was in all parts of the Latin world, it was but feeble when compared with that of the monastic orders, which constituted another horn of the beast. The Mendicant Friars, the most considerable of the regular clergy, first made their appearance in the early part of the thirteenth century. These friars were divided by Gregory X. in a general council which he assembled at Lyons in 1272, into the four following societies or denominations, viz. the Dominicans, the Franciscans, the Carmelites, and the Hermits of St. Augustine. "As the pontiffs," observes Mosheim, "allowed these four Mendicant orders the liberty of travelling wherever they thought proper, of conversing with persons of all ranks, of instructing the youth and the multitude wherever they went; and as these monks exhibited, in their outward appearance and manner of life, more striking marks of gravity and holiness than were observable in the other monastic societies, they arose all at once to the very summit of fame, and were regarded with the utmost esteem and veneration throughout all the countries of Europe. The enthusiastic attachment to these sanctimonious beggars went so far, that, as we learn from the most authentic records, several cities were divided, or cantoned out, into four parts, with a view to these four orders; the first part was assigned to the Dominicans, the second to the Franciscans, the third to the Carmelites, and the fourth to the Augustinians. The people were unwilling to receive the sacraments from any other hands than those of the Mendicants, to whose churches they crowded to perform their devotions, while living; and were extremely desirous to deposit there also their remains after death; all which occasioned grievous complaints among the ordinary priests, to whom the cure of souls was committed, and who considered themselves as the spiritual guides of the multitude. Nor did the influence and credit of the Mendicants end here: for we find in the history of this (xiiith century) and the succeeding ages, that they were employed not only in spiritual matters, but also in temporal and political affairs of the greatest consequence; in composing the differences of princes, concluding treaties of peace, concerting alliances, presiding in cabinet councils, governing courts, levying taxes, and other occupations not only remote from, but absolutely inconsistent with, the monastic character and profession. We must not, however, imagine that all the Mendicant Friars attained to the same degree of reputation and authority; for the power of the Dominicans and Franciscans surpassed greatly that of the two other orders, and rendered them singularly conspicuous in the eyes of the world. During three centuries these two fraternities governed, with an almost universal and absolute sway, both state and church; filled the most eminent posts, ecclesiastical and civil; taught in the universities and churches with an authority before which all opposition was silent; and maintained the pretended majesty and prerogatives of the Roman pontiffs against kings, princes, bishops, and heretics, with incredible ardour and equal success. The Dominicans and Franciscans were, before the Reformation, what the Jesuits have been since that happy and glorious period, the very soul of the hierarchy, the engines of state, the secret springs of all the motions of the one and the other, and the authors and directors of every great and important event in the religious and political world." Thus the Romish hierarchy has exercised all the power of the first beast in his sight, both temporal and spiritual; and, therefore, with such astonishing influence as this over secular princes, it was no difficult matter for him to cause—

The earth, and them which dwell therein, to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed.] That is, he causes the whole Latin world to submit to the authority of the Latin empire, with the revived western empire at its head; persuading them that such submission is beneficial to their spiritual interests, and absolutely necessary for their salvation. Here it is observable that both beasts have dominion over the same earth; for it is expressly said, that the second beast causeth THE EARTH and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast: therefore it is, as Bishop Newton and others have observed, imperium in imperio, "an empire within an empire." We have, consequently, the fullest evidence that the two beasts consist in the division of the great Latin empire, by the usurpation of the Latin clergy, into two distinct empires, the one secular, the other spiritual; and both united in one Antichristian design, viz. to diffuse their most abominable system of idolatry over the whole earth, and to extend the sphere of their domination. Here we have also an illustration of that remarkable passage in chap. xvi. 10. the kingdom of the beast, i. e. the kingdom of the Latin kingdom; which is apparently a solecism, but in reality expressed with wonderful precision. The fifth vial is poured out upon the throne of the beast, and HIS KINGDOM is darkened, i. e. the Latin kingdom in subjection to the Latin kingdom, or the secular Latin empire.

Verse 13. And he doeth great wonders] That we may have the greatest assurance possible that the two-horned beast is the spiritual Latin empire, it is called in chap. xix. 20. a passage illustrative of the one now under consideration, the false prophet, "than which," as Bishop Newton observes, "there cannot be a stronger or plainer argument to prove that false doctors or teachers were particularly designed;" for prophet, in the Scripture style, is not unfrequently used for a preacher or expounder of God's word. See 1 Cor. xiv. It hence follows, that the two-horned beast is an empire of false doctors or teachers.

In order to establish the Latin church upon a foundation that can never fail, the false prophet doeth great wonders; he attempts the most wonderful and prodigious exploits, and is crowned with incredible success. He has the art to persuade his followers that the clergy of the church of Rome are the only true ministers of Christ; that they have such great influence in the court of heaven as to be able not only to forgive sins, but also to grant indulgences in sin, by paying certain stipulated sums. He persuades them too that they can do works of supererogation. He pretends that an incredible humber of miracles have been wrought, and are still working, by the Almighty, as so many evidences of the great sanctity of the Latin church; and the false prophet has such an astonishing influence over his flock, as to cause them to believe all his fabulous legends and lying wonders. He pretends also (and is believed!) that his power is not confined to this world; that he is able by his prayers to deliver the souls of the deceased from what he calls purgatory, a place which he has fabled to exist for the purification of sinful souls after their departure from this world. His wonderful exploits in being able to induce men, possessed of reasonable faculties, to believe his monstrous absurdities, do not end here; he even Maketh fire come down from heaven—in the sight of men] Fire, in Scripture, when it signifies wrath, represents that species of indignation which is attended with the destruction of whatever is the cause of it. Thus the wrath of God is likened to fire, Psa. xviii. 7, 8. Jer. iv. 4. Therefore the fire which the false prophet bringeth down from heaven upon the earth, is the fiery indignation which he causes to come down from the heaven or throne of the Latin empire upon all those of the earth or Latin world who rebel against his authority. All this has been fulfilled in the Romish hierarchy: the Latin clergy have denominated all those that oppose their authority heretics; they have instituted tribunals to try the cause of heresy; and all those that would not submit to their idolatry, they have condemned to various kinds of tortures and deaths. It is said of the false prophet that he bringeth fire FROM HEAVEN upon the earth; that is to say, he will only try the cause of heresy, and pass the sentence of condemnation; he will not suffer an ecclesiastic to execute the sentence of the court: the destroying fire he causeth to come down from the heaven or throne of the Latin empire; secular princes and magistrates must execute the sentence of death upon all that are capitally condemned by the spiritual power. He MAKETH fire come down from heaven; he compels secular princes to assist him against heretics; and if any rebel against his authority, he immediately puts them under the bond of the anathema, so that they are deprived of their offices, and exposed to the insults and persecution of their brethren. Thus the false prophet deceives the Latin world by the means of those miricles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast. Under the appearance of great sanctity, he persuades men to believe all his lying doctrines; and enforces his canons and decretals with the sword of the civil magistrate.

Verse 14. Saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword, and did live.] The image of the beast must designate a person who represents in himself the whole power of the Latin empire: therefore it cannot be the emperor; for though he was, according to his own account, supremum caput Christianitatis, the supreme head of Christendom, yet he was only the chief of the Germanic confederation; and, consequently, was only sovereign of the principal power of the Latin empire. The image of the beast must be the supreme ruler of the Latin empire; and as it is through the influence of the false prophet, that this image is made for the first beast, this great chief must be an ecclesiastic. Who this is has been ably shown by Bishop Newton, in his comment on the following verse:

Verse 15. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.] "The influence of the two-horned beast, or corrupted clergy, is farther seen in persuading and inducing mankind to make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live. This image and representative of the beast is the Pope. He is properly the idol of the church. He represents in himself the whole power of the beast, and is the head of all authority, temporal as well as spiritual. He is nothing more than a private person, without power and without authority, till the two-horned beast, or corrupted clergy, by choosing him Pope, give life unto him, and enable him to speak and utter his decrees, and to persecute even to death as many as refuse to submit to him, and to worship him. As soon as he is chosen Pope, he is clothed with the pontifical robes, and crowned and placed upon the altar, and the cardinals come and kiss his feet, which ceremony is called adoration. They first elect, and then they worship him; as in the medals of Martin V. where two are represented crowning the Pope, and two kneeling before him, with this inscription, Quem creant adorant, Whom they create they adore. He is THE PRINCIPLE OF UNITY TO THE TEN KINGDOMS OF THE BEAST; and causeth, as far as he is able, all who will not acknowledge his supremacy to be put to death." The great ascendancy which the Popes have obtained over the kings of the Latin world by means of the Romish hierarchy, is sufficiently marked in the history of Europe. As long as the great body of the people were devoted to the Roman Catholic idolatry, it was in vain for the kings of the different Roman Catholic countries to oppose the increasing usurpations of the Popes. They ascended, in spite of all opposition, to the highest pinnacle of human greatness; for even the authority of the emperors themselves was established or annulled at their pleasure. The high-sounding tone of the Popes commenced in Gregory VII. A. D. 1078, commonly known by the name of Hildebrand, who aimed at nothing less than universal empire. He published an anathema against all who received the investiture of a bishopric or abbacy from the hands of a layman; as also against those by whom the investiture should be performed. This measure being opposed by Henry IV. emperor of Germany, the Pope deposed him from all power and dignity, regal or imperial. See Corps Diplomatique, Tom. I. pag. 53. Great numbers of German princes siding with the Pope, the emperor found himself under the necessity of going (in January, 1077) to the bishop of Rome to implore his forgiveness, which was not granted him till he had fasted three days, standing from morning to evening barefooted, and exposed to the inclemency of the weather! In the following century the power of the Popes was still further increased; for on the 23d of September, 1122, the emperor Henry V. gave up all right of conferring the regalia by the ceremony of the ring and crosier, and that the chapters and communities should be at liberty to fill up their own vacancies. In this century the election of the Roman pontiffs was confined by Alexander III. to the college of cardinals. In the thirteenth century the Popes (Dr. Mosheim observes) "inculcated that pernicious maxim, that the bishop of Rome is the supreme lord of the universe; and that neither princes nor bishops, civil governors nor ecclesiastical rulers, have any lawful power in church or state but what they derive from him. To establish their authority, both in civil and ecclesiastical matters, upon the firmest foundation, they assumed to themselves the power of disposing of the various offices of the church, whether of a higher or more subordinate nature, and of creating bishops, abbots, and canons, according to their fancy. The first of the pontiffs who usurped such an extravagant extent of authority was Innocent III. (A. D. 1198—1216.) whose example was followed by Honorius III. (A. D. 1216.) Gregory IX. (A. D. 1227.) and several of their successors." Thus the plenitude of the Papal power, (as it is termed,) was not confined to what was spiritual; the Romish bishops "dethroned monarchs, disposed of crowns, absolved subjects from the obedience due to their sovereigns, and laid kingdoms under interdicts. There was not a state in Europe which had not been disquieted by their ambition. There was not a throne which they had not shaken, nor a prince who did not tremble at their presence." The point of time in which the Romish bishops attained their highest elevation of authority was about the commencement of the 14th century. Boniface VIII. who was Pope at this time, outstripped all his predecessors in the high-sounding tone of his public decrees. According to his famous bull, Unam Sanctam, published Nov. 16, 1302, "the secular power is but a simple emanation from the ecclesiastical; and the double power of the Pope, founded upon Holy Scripture, is even an article of faith. God," said he, "has confided to Saint Peter, and to his successors, two swords, the one spiritual, the other temporal. The first ought to be exercised by the church itself, and the other by secular powers for the service of the church, and according to the will of the Pope. The latter, that is to say, the temporal sword, is in subjection to the former; and the temporal authority depends indispensably on the spiritual power which judges it, while God alone can judge the spiritual power. Finally, he adds, it is necessary to salvation for every human creature to be in subjection to the Roman pontiff." The false prophet SAID "to them that dwell upon the earth, that they should make an image to the beast that had the wound by a sword and did live;" that is, the Romish priesthood PREACHED UP the Pope's supremacy over temporal princes; and, through their astonishing influence on the minds of the people, the bishop of Rome, at last, became the supreme sovereign of the secular Latin empire; and thus was at the head of all authority, temporal and spiritual.

The Papists have, in their various superstitions, professed to worship God. But they are said, in the unerring words of prophecy, to worship the dragon, beast, and image of the beast; and to blaspheme God: for they received as holy those commandments of men that stand in direct opposition to the Sacred Scriptures, and which have been imposed on them by the Romish bishops, aided by the secular powers. "God is a Spirit, and they who worship Him must worship Him in SPIRIT and in TRUTH."

Verse 16. And he caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark] To ascertain the meaning of the mark which the two-horned beast causes all orders and degrees of men in the Latin world to receive, we need only refer to chap. xiv. 11. where the mark imposed by the two-horned beast is called the mark of his name. The name of the beast is the Latin empire; the mark of his name must, therefore, be his LATIN worship; for this very reason, that it is the two-horned beast, or false prophet, who causes all descriptions of persons to receive it. Now it is well known that the continual employment of the Latin clergy is to enforce the Latin idolatry upon their flocks. The mass and offices of the church, which are in Latin, and contain the sum and substance of their idolatrous worship, are of different kinds, and abound in impious prayers to the Virgin Mary, and the saints and angels. In a word, the LATIN worship is the universal badge of distinction of the LATIN church, from all other churches on the face of the earth; and is, therefore, the only infallible MARK by which a genuine Papist can be distinguished from the rest of mankind. But the two-horned beast causes all to receive this mark—

In their right hand, or in their foreheads] Right hand, in Scripture language, when used figuratively, represents the physical power of the person of whom it is spoken; and, when applied to God, designates a signal manifestation of Divine power against His enemies, and in behalf of His people. See Psa. xvii. 7. xx. 6. xxi. 8. xlv. 3, 4, &c. The reception of the mark in the right hand must, therefore, mean that all, so receiving it, devote the whole powers of their mind and body for the propagation of the Latin worship, and in the eradication of all they denominate heresies out of their church. But some receive the mark in their foreheads. By any thing being impressed upon the forehead, is meant the public profession of whatever is inscribed or marked upon it: see Rev. ix. 4. xiv. 1. xxii. 4, &c. The mark of the beast being received on the forehead, therefore, means that all those so marked make a public profession of the Latin worship; whereby it is evident to all that they form a part of the Latin Church. Many may be marked in the right hand, who are also marked on their foreheads; but it does not follow that those marked on their foreheads are also marked in their right hand; that is to say, it is not every individual that complies with the Latin worship, who, to the utmost of his power, endeavours to propagate his religious system. Hence the propriety of the words, "He causeth all—to receive a mark in their right hand, OR in their foreheads."

Verse 17. And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark] "If any," observes Bishop Newton, "dissent from the stated and authorized forms, they are condemned and excommunicated as heretics; and in consequence of that, they are no longer suffered to buy or sell; they are interdicted from traffic and commerce, and all the benefits of civil society. So Roger Hoveden relates of William the Conqueror, that he was so dutiful to the Pope that he would not permit any one in his power to buy or sell any thing whom he found disobedient to the apostolic see. So the canon of the council of Lateran, under Pope Alexander III. made against the Waldenses and Albigenses, enjoins, upon pain of anathema, that no man presume to entertain or cherish them in his house or land, or exercise traffic with them. The synod of Tours in France, under the same Pope, orders, under the like intermination, that no man should presume to receive or assist them, no not so much as to hold any communion with them in selling or buying; that, being deprived of the comfort of humanity, they may be compelled to repent of the error of their way." In the tenth and eleventh centuries, the severity against the excommunicated was carried to so high a pitch, that nobody might come near them, not even their own wives, children, or servants; they forfeited all their natural legal rights and privileges, and were excluded from all kinds of offices. The form of excommunication in the Romish church is to take lighted torches, throw them upon the ground with curses and anathemas, and trample them out under foot to the ringing of the bells. It is in this, and similar ways, that the false prophet has terrified the Latin world, and kept it in subjection to the secular and spiritual powers. Those interdicted by the two-horned beast from all offices of civil life, are also such as have not—

The name of the beast, or the number of his name.] See on the following verse.

Verse 18. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.] In this verse we have the very name of the beast given under the symbol of the number 666. Before the invention of figures by the Arabs, in the tenth century, letters of the alphabet were used for numbers. The Greeks, in the time of Homer, or soon after, are thought by some to have assigned to their letters a numerical value corresponding to their order in the alphabet: thus, α was 1, because the first letter, and ω 24, being the last. It is in this manner that the books of the Iliad and Odyssey are numbered, which have been thus marked by Homer himself, or by some person who lived near his time. A system of representing numbers, of great antiquity, was used by the Greeks, very much resembling that afterward adopted by the Romans. This consisted in assigning to the initial letter of the name of the number a value equal to the number. Thus Χ, the initial of χιλια, stood for a thousand; Δ, the initial of δεκα, for ten; Π, the initial of πεντε, for five, &c. Herodotus, the grammarian, is the only writer of antiquity who has noticed this system, and the chronological table of remarkable events on the Arundelian marbles, the only work extant in which this method of representing numbers is exhibited. The system now in use cannot be traced to any very ancient source. What can be proved is, that it was in use before the commencement of the Christian era. Numerical letters denoting the year of the Roman emperor's reign, exist on great numbers of the Egyptian coins, from the time of Augustus Cæsar through the succeeding reigns.—See Numi Ægyptii

Imperatorii, à Geo. Zacga, edit. Rom. 1787. There are coins extant marked of the 2d, 3d, 14th, 30th, 35th, 38th, 39th, 40th, 41st, and 42d years of Augustus Cæsar, with the numerical letters preceded by L or Λ, for λυκοβας, year, thus: LB, LΓ, LIΔ, LΛ, LΛE, LΛH, LΛΘ, LM, LMA, and LMB. The following is the Greek alphabet, with the numerical value of each letter affixed, according to the generally received system:

γ 3	λ 30	τ 300
δ 4	μ 40	υ 400
ε 5	ν 50	φ 500
ζ 7	ξ 60	χ 600
η 8	ο 70	ψ 700
ϑ 9	π 80	ω 800

The method just described of representing numbers by letters of the alphabet, gave rise to a practice among the ancients of representing names also by numbers. Examples of this kind abound in the writings of Heathens, Jews, and Christians. When the practice of counting the number in names or phrases first began to be used, cannot be ascertained; it is sufficient for the illustration of the passage under consideration, if it can be shown to have been in existence in the apostolic age. Seneca, who was contemporary with St. Paul, informs us, in his eighty-eighth epistle, that Apion, the grammarian, maintained Homer to have been the author of the division of his poems of the Iliad and Odyssey into forty-eight books: for a proof of which Apion produces the following argument, that the poet commenced his Iliad with the word μηιν, that the two first letters, whose sum is 48, might indicate such division. Leonidas of Alexandria, who flourished in the reigns of Nero, Vespasian, &c. carried the practice of computing the number in words so far as to construct equinumeral distichs; that is, epigrams of four lines, whose first hexameter and pentameter contain the same number with the other two. We will only notice two examples: the first is addressed to one of the emperors; the other to Poppæa, the wife of Nero.

Θυει σοι τοδε γραμμα γενεθλιακαισιν εν ὡραις
Καισαρ Νειλαιη Μωσα Λεωνιδεω.
Καλλιοπης γαρ ακαπνον αει θυος· εις δε νεωτα,
Ην εθελῃς, θυσει τωδε περισσοτερα.

"The muse of Leonidas of the Nile offers up to thee, O Cæsar, this writing, at the time of thy nativity; for The sacrifice of Calliope is always without smoke: but in the ensuing year he will offer up, if thou wilt, better things than this."

From the numerical table already given, the preceding epigram may be shown to contain equinumeral distichs, as follows: Θυει contains 424, i. e. ϑ 9, υ 400, ε 5, ι 10; in all 424: σοι contains 280, i. e. σ 200, ο 70, ι 10. In like manner τοδε will be found to contain 379, γραμμα 185, γενεθλιακαισιν 404, εν 55, ωραις 1111, Καισαρ 332, Νειλαιη 114, Μωσα 711, Λεωνιδεω 1704. The sum of all these is 5699, the number in the first distich. In the second distich, Καλλιοπης contains 449, γαρ 104, ακαπνον 272, αει 16, ϑυος 679, εις 215, δε 9, νεωτα 1156, Ην 58, εθελῃς 267, (the subscribed iota being taken into the account,) ϑυσει 624, τωδε 779, περισσοτερα 1071. The sum of all 5699; which is precisely the same with that contained in the first distich.

Ουρανιον μειμημα γενεθλιακαισιν εν ωραις
Τωτ' απο Νειλογενους δεξο Λεωνιδεω,
Ποππαια Διος ευνι, Σεβασιας· ευαδε γαρ σοι
Δωρα τα και λεκτρων αξια και σοφιης.

"O Poppæa, wife of Jupiter, (Nero,) Augusta, receive from Leonidas of the Nile a celestial globe on the day of thy nativity; for gifts please thee which are suited to thy imperial dignity and wisdom."

In this epigram each of the distichs contains the number 6422; viz. Ουρανιον 751, (i. e. ο 70, υ 400, ρ 100, α 1, ν 50, ι 10, ο 70, ν 50, the sum of which is 751,) μειμημα 144, γενεθλιακαισιν 404, εν 55, ωραις 1111, τωτ' 1070, απο 151, Νειλογενους 893, δεξο 139, Λεωνιδεω 1704: the sum of all 6422. The numbers corresponding to the words of the second distich are, respectively, 322, 284, 465, 919, 415, 104, 280, 905, 301, 31, 1305, 72, 31, 988; the sum of which is also 6422.

This poet did not restrict himself to the construction of equinumeral distichs. The following is one of his distichs in which the hexameter line is made equal in number to its corresponding pentameter:

Εις προς ενα ψηφοισιν ισαζεται, ου δυο δοιοις,
Ου γαρ ετι φερω την δολιχογραφιην.

"One line is made equal in number to one, not two to two; for I no longer approve of long epigrams.

In this distich the words of the hexameter line contain, respectively, the numbers 215, 450, 56, 1548, 534, 470, 474, and 364; the sum of which is 4111. The numbers corresponding to the words of the pentameter line are, respectively, 470, 104, 315, 1408, 358, and 1456; the sum of which is also 4111. The equinumeral distichs of Leonidas are contained in the second volume of Brunck and Jacob's edition of the Greek Anthology. It appears from ancient records, that some of the Greeks in the early part of the second century, if not in the apostolic age, employed themselves in counting the numbers contained in the verses of Homer to find out what two consecutive lines were ισοψηφοι, or equinumeral. Aulus Gellius, the grammarian, who lived in the reigns of Hadrian and Antoninus Pius, gives us an account, (lib. xiv. cap. 6.) of a person who presented him with a book filled with a variety of information collected from numerous sources, of which he was at liberty to avail himself in writing his Attic Nights. Among the subjects treated of in this book, we are informed by Gellius, was that of Homeric equinumeral verses. None of the examples are given by the grammarian: but Labbeus says, in his Bibl. Nov. MSS. p. 284, that the equinumeral verses are marked in the Codex 2216, in the French king's library. Gronovius, in his notes on Gellius, p. 655, has copied what he found in a MS. (No. 1488.) upon this subject, viz. two examples out of the Iliad, and one in the Odyssey. The examples in the Iliad are lines 265 and 266, of book vii. each line containing 3508; and lines 306 and 307 of book xix. each containing 2848. The verses in the Odyssey, (ω, 110, 111.) stated to be equinumeral in the MS. cited by Gronovius, have not now this property, owing possibly to some corruption that may have taken place in the lines from frequent transcription.

For other examples of the computation of the number in words or phrases, the Reader is referred to the Oneirocritica of Artemidorus, lib. ii. c. 75. lib. iii. c. 34. and lib. iv. c. 26. See also Martiani Minei Felicis Capellæ Africarthaginensis, De Nuptiis Philologiæ et Mercurii, lib. ii. and vii.; Irenæus adversus Hæreses, lib. i. ii. and v.; Tertullian. de Præscriptionibus Hæret. Tom. II. p. 487. Wirceburgi, 1781.; Sibyll. Oracul. lib. i., &c.

Having thus shown that it was a practice in the apostolic age, and subsequently, to count the number in words and phrases, and even in whole verses, it will be evident, that what is intended by 666, is that the Greek name of the beast, (for it was in the Greek language that Jesus Christ communicated His Revelation to St. John,) contains this number. Many names have been proposed, from time to time, as applicable to the beast, and at the same time containing 666. We will only notice one example, viz. that famous one of Irenæus, which has been approved of by almost all commentators who have given any sort of tolerable exposition of the Revelation. The word alluded to is Λατεινος, the letters of which have the following numerical values—λ 30, α 1, τ 300, ε 5, ι 10, ν 50, ο 70, ς 200; and if these be added together, the sum will be found to be equivalent to the number of the beast. This word was applied by Irenæus, who lived in the second century, to the then existing Roman empire; "for," says he, "they are LATINS who now reign." Though it is evident, from the Notes on the preceding part of this chapter, that the conjecture of Irenæus respecting the number 666 having some way or other a reference to the empire of the Latins is well founded; yet his production of the word Λατεινος, as containing 666, is not a proof that it has any such reference. Bellarmin. the Jesuit objected against Λατεινος being the name intended in the prophecy from its orthography; for, says he, it should be written Λατινος. That the objection of the learned Jesuit has very great force, is evident from every Greek writer extant, who has used the Greek word for Latinus, in all of whom it is uniformly found without the diphthong.—See Hesiod, Polybius, Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Strabo, Plutarch, Dio Cassius, Photius, the Byzantine historians, &c. &c. It hence follows that if the Greek word for Latinus had been intended, the number contained in Λατινος, and not that in Λατεινος, would have been called the number of the beast. We have already observed that the beast is the Latin kingdom or empire; therefore, if this observation be correct, the Greek words signifying The Latin kingdom must have this number. The most concise method of expressing this among the Greeks was as follows: Ἡ Λατινη βασιλεια, which is thus numbered—

α	= 1
τ	= 300
ι	= 10
ν	= 50
Β	= 2	KINGDOM.
α	= 1
σ	= 200
ι	= 10
λ	= 30
ε	= 5
ι	= 10

No other kingdom on earth can be found to contain 666. This is then ἡ σοφια, the wisdom, or demonstration. A beast is the symbol of a kingdom; THE beast has been proved, in the preceding part of this chapter, to be the LATIN kingdom; and Ἡ Λατινη βασιλεια being shown to contain, exclusively, the number 666, is the demonstration.

Having demonstrated that Ἡ Λατινη βασιλεια, The Latin kingdom, is the name of the beast, we must now examine what is intended by the phrase in the 17th verse, the name of the beast, or the number of his name. Bishop Newton supposes that the name of the beast, and the number of his name, mean the same thing; but this opinion is totally irreconcileable with chap. xv. 2. where St. John informs us that he "saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire, and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over the number of his name, stand upon the sea of glass, having the harps of God." In this passage it is evident that the beast, his image, and the number of his name, are perfectly distinct; and, therefore, no two of them can mean the same thing. Hence what is meant by the name of the beast is entirely different from that intended by the number of his name. But how can this be, when it is expressly declared that the number of the beast is 666, which number is declared to be that of his name? The solution of the whole mystery is as follows: both beasts of the Apocalypse, we have already shown, have the same appellation; that is to say, the name of the first and second beast is equally Ἡ Λατινη βασιλεια, the Latin kingdom; therefore, by the name of the beast is meant the Latin kingdom, and by the number of his name is also meant the Latin kingdom. Hence only one of the beasts is numbered; the name of that which is not numbered is termed the name of the beast, and the numbered Latin empire is denominated the number of his name, or 666, exactly agreeable to an ancient practice, already noticed, of representing names by the numbers contained in them. Therefore, the meaning of the whole passage is, that those whom the false prophet does not excommunicate, or put out of the pale of his church, have the mark of the beast, that is, are genuine Papists, or such as are actively or passively obedient to his Latin idolatry. Those also escape his ecclesiastical interdicts who have the name of the beast, or the number of his name. By a person having the name of the beast is evidently meant his being a Latin, i. e. in subjection to the Latin empire; and, consequently, an individual of the Latin world: therefore, those that have the name of the beast, or the number of his name, are those that are subjects of the Latin empire, or of the numbered Latin empire, viz. who are in subjection to the Latin empire secular or spiritual. All that were in subjection to the secular or spiritual power were not Papists in heart; hence the propriety of distinguishing those which have the mark from those which have the name of the beast, or the number of his name. But which of the two beasts it is which God has numbered, has been not a little contested. That it is the first beast which is numbered has been the prevailing opinion. On this side are Lord Napier, Whiston, Bishop Newton, Faber, and others. Among those that have supposed the second beast to be the one which is numbered are Dr. Henry More, Pyle, Kershaw, Galloway, Bicheno, Dr. Hales, &c. Dr. Gill and Reader assert that both beasts have the same number, and that the name is Λατεινος. Though it has been demonstrated that the name of the beast is the Latin kingdom, it is impossible from the mere name to say whether it is the Latin empire SECULAR OR SPIRITUAL: hence the necessity of determining which of the two beasts God has computed. That it is the second beast which is numbered is evident from three different passages in the Apocalypse. The first is in chap. xiii. 17. where it is said "that no man might buy or sell save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." Here the name of the beast is mentioned before the number of his name, which is a presumptive evidence that the name of the beast refers to the first beast, and the number of his name to the second. The second passage is in chap. xv. 2. where mention is made of "them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over the number of his name." That here styled the beast is evidently the secular Latin empire; for it was to this that the two-horned beast made an image; consequently there can be no doubt that the number of his name, or the numbered Latin empire, is the two-horned beast, or false prophet. To feel the full force of this argument, it must be considered that the saints of God are represented as getting the victory over the beast, as well as over the number of his name, which is a proof that two distinct antichristian empires are here spoken of, for otherwise it would be tautology. That the two-horned beast is the one which is numbered is farther evident from a comparison of this passage with chap. xix. 20. In the latter passage the words are—"And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet, that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image." Here nothing is said of the number of his name, which is so particularly mentioned in chap. xv. 2., and in that chapter nothing is mentioned of the false prophet; the reason of which can only be that what is termed in one passage the number of his name, is in its parallel one called the false prophet. Hence the two-horned beast, or false prophet, is also designated by the phrase the number of his name: and, consequently, it is this beast which is numbered. But what adds the last degree of certainty to this argument is the passage in chap. xiii. 18. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath a mind count the number of the beast; for it is the number of a man: and his number is Six hundred threescore and six. Here is the solution of this mystery; let him that hath a mind for investigations of this kind, find out a kingdom which contains precisely the number 666; for this must be infallibly the name of the beast. Ἡ Λατινη βασιλεια, THE LATIN KINGDOM, has exclusively this number. But both beasts are called by this name;—which is, therefore, the one that is numbered? It is said the number of the beast is the number of a man; consequently, the numbered beast must be A MAN, that is, it must be represented elsewhere in the Revelation under this emblem, for in no other sense can an empire be denominated a man. Therefore it is not the ten-horned beast, for this is uniformly styled The Beast in every part of the Apocalypse where there has been occasion to mention this power. It can, therefore, be no other than the two-horned beast, or Romish hierarchy; which, on account of its preaching to the world its most antichristian system of doctrines, and calling it Christianity, is likewise named in chap. xvi. 13. xix. 20. and xx. 10. THE FALSE PROPHET.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIV.

Verse 1. A Lamb stood on the Mount Sion] This represents Jesus Christ in His sacrificial office: Mount Sion was a type of the Christian church.

And with him an hundred forty and four thousand] Representing those who were converted to Christianity from among the Jews.—See chap. vii. 4.

His Father's name written in their foreheads.] They were professedly, openly, and practically, the children of God, by faith in Christ Jesus. Different sects of idolaters have the peculiar mark of their god on their foreheads. This is practised in the East to the present day; and the mark is called the sectarial mark. Between eighty and ninety different figures are found on the foreheads of different Hindu deities, and their followers.

Almost every MS. of importance, as well as most of the Versions, and many of the Fathers, read this clause thus: Having HIS NAME and his Father's name written upon their foreheads. This is undoubtedly the true reading; and is properly received by Griesbach into the text.

Verse 2. The voice of many waters] That is, of multitudes of various nations.

The voice of harpers] Though the sounds were many and apparently confused, yet both harmony and melody were preserved.

Verse 3. They sung—a new song]—See on chap. v. 9.

No man could learn that song] As none but genuine Christians can worship God acceptably, because they approach Him through the only Mediator: so none can understand the deep things of God but such; nor can others know the cause why true believers exult so much in God through Christ; because they know not the communion which such hold with the Father and the Son, through the Holy Ghost.

Verse 4. These are they which were not defiled with women] They are pure from idolatry; and are presented as unspotted virgins to their Lord and Saviour Christ.—See 2 Cor. xi. 2. There may be an allusion here to the Israelites committing idolatry through the means of their criminal connexion with the Midianitish women.—See Numb. xxv. 1—4. and xxxi. 16.

Follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth] They go through good and through evil report, bear his reproach, and love not their lives even to the death.

The firstfruits unto God] The reference appears to be to those Jews, who were the first converts to Christianity.

Verse 5. In their mouth was found no guile] When brought before kings and rulers, they did not dissemble, but boldly confessed the Lord Jesus.

Verse 6. Another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel] Whether this angel mean any more than a particular dispensation of Providence and grace, by which the gospel shall be rapidly sent through the whole world; or whether it mean any especial messenger, order of preachers, people, or society of Christians, whose professed object it is to send the gospel of the kingdom throughout the earth; we know not. But the vision seems truly descriptive of a late institution, intituled THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY, whose object it is to print and circulate the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, through all the habitable world; and in all the languages spoken on the face of the earth. Already they have been the means by actually printing, or by affording the means to different nations to print for themselves, the Bible, in a vast number of languages and dialects: so that it has been sent in hundreds of thousands of copies, in whole or in part, to almost every part of the globe; viz. in their native language to the Welsh; in Gaelic, to the Irish; in Erse, to the Highlands of Scotland; in Manks, to the Isle of Man; in French, Italian, Portuguese, and Spanish, to those countries, and Switzerland. In Low Dutch, to Holland, &c. in High Dutch, to Germany, Prussia, &c. Through them a similar society has been established at St. Petersburgh, by which the Bible has been sent in Slavonic to the Russians; and in different dialects to the people of that vast empire: besides the Turkish, Tartaric, and Calmuck. They have also sent the Holy Scriptures in ancient and modern Greek to Asia Minor, and the different isles of the Mediterranean sea; in Arabic and Æthiopic, to Egypt and Abyssinia; in Syriac, to the Holy Land; and to the Christians at Travancore. They have also greatly and effectually assisted a very worthy society in the East Indies, whose indefatigable and incomparable missionaries, the Rev. Messrs. Carey, Marshman, and Ward, have translated the Scriptures into the principal languages of India: and they have furnished the means of printing a complete translation of the New Testament in the Chinese language at Canton, by the Rev. Mr. Morrison. In short, almost every nation in the universe has, through this society, directly or indirectly received, or are receiving, the words of eternal life; so that it appears to answer the description of the Apocalyptic "angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth; and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."

Verse 7. Fear God, and give glory to him] This is the general language of the Sacred Writings. Worship the true God, the Creator and Governor of all things, and give Him glory, for to him alone, not to idols or men, all glory and honour belong.

Verse 8. Babylon is fallen, is fallen] This is generally understood to be a prediction concerning Rome: and it is certain that Rome, in the rabbinical writings, is termed Babylon.

That great city] Among the same writers this city is styled קרתא רבתא karetha rabbetha, the great city; and רומי רבתא Romi rabbetha, the great Rome. But which Rome is meant? Pagan or Papal Rome? Some parts of the description apply best to the former.

The wine of the wrath of her fornication.] There is an allusion here to a custom of impure women; who give philtres, or love potions, to those whom they wish to seduce and bind to their will: and these potions were generally of an intoxicating nature, greatly inflaming the blood, and disturbing the intellect.

Fornication and adultery are frequently used in Scripture as emblems of idolatry and false worship.

The wine of the wrath is another expression for the envenomed or poisoned cup given by such women.

No nation of the earth spread their idolatries so far as the ancient Romans; they were as extensive as their conquests. And Papal Rome has been not less active in disseminating her superstitions. She has given her rituals, but not the everlasting gospel, to most nations of the earth.

9 And the third angel followed them, saying, with a loud voice, [a] If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand,

10 The same [b] shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is [c] poured out without mixture into [d] the cup of his indignation; and [e] he shall be tormented with [f] fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb:

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

11 And [g] the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

12 [h] Here is the patience of the saints: [i] here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

13 And I heard a voice from heaven, saying

[a] Ch. 13. 14, 15, 16.—[b] Ps. 75. 8. Isa. 51. 17. Jer. 25. 15.—[c] Ch. 18. 6.—[d] Ch. 16. 19.

[e] Ch. 20. 10.—[f] Ch. 19. 20.—[g] Isa. 34. 10. ch. 19. 3.—[h] Ch. 13. 10. [i] Ch. 12. 17.

Verse 9. And the third angel followed] Bishop Bale considers these three angels as three descriptions of preachers, who should bear their testimony against the corruptions of the Papal church.

The beast and his image] See the Notes on chap. xiii.

Mark in his forehead] Such as the sectarial marks of the idolatrous Hindus, as has been observed before.

Verse 10. The wine of the wrath of God] As they have drunk the intoxicating wine of idolatry or spiritual fornication, they shall now drink the wine of God's wrath, which is poured out into the cup of His indignation. This is an allusion to the poisoned cup, which certain criminals were obliged to drink; on which ensued speedy death.—See on Heb. ii. 9.

Shall be tormented with fire and brimstone] An allusion to the punishment of Sodom and Gomorrha, for their unnatural crimes.

Presence of the holy angels, and—of the Lamb] These being the instruments employed in their destruction; the Lamb, the Lord Jesus Christ, acting as Judge.

Verse 11. The smoke of their torment] Still an allusion to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrha.

Verse 12. Here is the patience of the saints] Here the faith of the true Christians shall be proved: they will follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth; they keep the commandments of God, and are steadfast in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Sometimes ἡ ὑπομονη, patience, or perseverance, is taken for the reward of these virtues: the text, therefore, may be thus understood—here is the reward of the perseverance of the true Christians; for, although they die for the testimony of Jesus, yet they shall be unutterably blessed.—See the next verse.

Verse 13. I heard a voice from heaven] As the information now to be given was of the utmost importance, it is solemnly communicated by a voice from heaven; and the apostle is commanded to write or record what is said.

Blessed are the dead] Happy are they. They are happy in two respects:—1. They do not see the evil that shall come upon the world; and are exempted from any farther sufferings. 2. They actually and conscientiously enjoy happiness in a state of blessedness.

In the first sense, Happy are the dead! is a proverb frequently to be met in the Greek and Roman poets.—Ex. gr.

Τρις μακαρες Δαναοι και τετρακις οι τοτ' ολοντο
Τροίη εν ευρειη χαριν Ατρειδησι φεροντες·
Ως δη εγωγ' οφελον θανεειν, και ποτμον επισπειν

ODYSS. lib. v. ver. 306.

Happy, thrice happy, who in battle slain,
Pressed in Atrides' cause, the Trojan plain:
O, had I died before that well-fought wall;
Had some distinguish'd day renown'd my fall;
Such as was that when showers of javelins fled
From conquering Troy, around Achilles' dead. POPE.

Thus imitated by the prince of the Roman poets:—

Extemplo Æneæ solvuntur frigora membra,
Ingemit; et duplices tendens ad sidera palmas,
Talia voce refert: O terque quaterque beati,
Queis ante ora patrum Trojæ sub mœnibus altis,
Contigit oppetere! O Danaum fortissime gentis
Tydide, mene Iliacis occumbere campis
Non potuisse? tuâque animam hanc effundere dextrâ?
Sævus ubi Æacidæ telo jacet Hector, ubi ingens
Sarpedon: ubi tot Simois correpta sub undis
Scuta virûm, galeasque et fortia corpora volvit.

Thrice happy those whose fate it was to fall,
Exclaims the chief, before the Trojan wall!
Oh, 'twas a glorious fate to die in fight!
To die so bravely in their parents' sight!
Oh, had I there, beneath Tydides' hand,
That bravest hero of the Grecian band;
Pour'd out this soul, with martial glory fir'd,
And in the plain triumphantly expir'd,
Where Hector fell, by fierce Achilles' spear,
And great Sarpedon, the renown'd in war;
Where Simois' stream encumber'd with the slain,

Which die in the Lord] These are the only glorious dead. They die, not in the field of battle, in either what are called lawful or unlawful wars against their fellow men: but they die in the cause of God; they die under the smile and approbation of God; and they die to live and reign with God for ever and ever.

From henceforth] Απ' αρτι, from this time; now; immediately. These words are joined to the following by many MSS. and some Versions. It was a maxim among the Jews, that as soon as the souls of the just departed from this life, they ascended immediately to heaven.

Yea, saith the Spirit] The Holy Spirit confirms the declaration from heaven; and assigns the reasons of it.

That they may rest from their labours] Have no more tribulation and distress.

And their works do follow them.] Εργα αυτων ακολουθει μετ' αυτων, and their works follow WITH them. They are in company. Here is an elegant prosopopœia, or personification; their good works, sufferings, &c. are represented as so many companions escorting them on their way to the kingdom of God.

There are some good and pertinent things in the Jewish writers on this subject. "Rabbi Jonathan taught, If a man perform one righteous action in this life, it goes before him into the world to come. But if a man commit one crime, it cleaves to him, and drags him to the day of judgment." Sota, fol. 3. 2. Avoda Sara, fol. 5. 1.

"Come and see, If any man observe a precept, that work ascends to God, and says (such a one) performed me. But, if a man transgress the law, that sin ascends to the Holy Blessed God, and says, I came from (such a one) who has performed me."—Sohar Levit. fol. 34. col. 136. Here the same personification is observed, as that in the text.

"In that hour in which a man passes from this life into eternity, all his works precede him; and there they say unto him, 'This and that hast thou done in such a place, on such a day.'—This he shall acknowledge.—They shall require that he shall subscribe this with his own hand, as it is written, Job xxxvii. 7. each man shall subscribe with his own hand: and, not only this, but he shall acknowledge that the sentence brought against him is most just."—Taanith, fol. 11. 1.

The following elegant similitude Schoettgen gives from Sepher Hachayim, Part II. fol. 47. 1, 2. "A certain man had three friends, two of which he loved; but the third he did not highly esteem. On a time the king commanded him to be called before him: and being alarmed, he sought to find an advocate. He went to that friend whom he loved most; but he utterly refused to go with him. The second offered to go with him as far as the door of the king's palace, but refused to speak a word in his behalf. The third, whom he loved least, not only went with him, but pleaded his cause so well before the king, that he was cleared from all blame. In like manner, every man has three friends, when he is cited by Death to appear before God. The first friend, whom he loved most, viz. his money, cannot accompany him at all. His second, viz. his relations and neighbours, accompanied him only to the grave, and then returned; but could not deliver him from the Judge. The third friend, whom he held but in little esteem, viz. the law and his good works, went with him to the king, and delivered him from judgment." The meaning of this most plainly is, that nothing except the deeds of good and evil men shall accompany them to the judgment-seat of God; and that a man's lot will be in the other world, as his conduct has been in this. Their works follow with them.

Verse 14. A white cloud] It is supposed, that from this verse to the end of the chapter the destruction of Rome is represented under the symbols of harvest and vintage; images very frequent among the ancient prophets; by which they represented the destruction and excision of nations.—See Joel iii. 12—14. Isa. xvii. 5. lxiii. 1. and Matt. xiii. 37.

A golden crown] In token of victory and regal power.

16 And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped.

17 And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle.

18 And another angel came out from the altar, [e] which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, [f] Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.

Verse 15. Thrust in thy sickle] Execute the judgments which God has decreed.

For the harvest of the earth is ripe] The cup of the people's iniquity is full.

Verse 16. The earth was reaped.] The judgments were executed. But where, or on whom, who can tell?

Verse 18. Power over fire] Probably meaning the same angel which is mentioned, ch. viii. 3. ix. 13. who stood by the altar of burnt-offering, having authority over its fire to offer that incense to God, which represents the prayers of the saints.

Verse 19. The great winepress of the wrath of God.] The place or kingdom where God executes his judgments on the workers of iniquity, whether Pagans or persecuting Christians; Rome Pagan, or Rome Papal.

Verse 20. Even unto the horse-bridles] A hyperbolical expression, to denote a great effusion of blood. The Jews said "When Hadrian besieged the city called Bitter, he slew so many, that the horses waded in blood up to their mouths." The same kind of hyperbole with that above—See Wetstein on this verse.

The space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.] It is said that the State of the church, or St. Peter's Patrimony, extends from Rome to the Po, two hundred Italian miles, which make exactly one thousand six hundred furlongs! If this be really so, the coincidence is certainly surprising, and worthy of deep regard.

On these two last verses pious Quesnel thus speaks:—"As the favourable sickle of Jesus Christ reaps his wheat when ripe for heaven, so that of the executioners of His justice cuts off from this life the tares which are only fit for the fire of hell. Then shall the blood of Christ cease to be trampled on by sinners; and that of the wicked shall be eternally trodden down in hell, which is the winepress of the wrath of God.

"And the winepress was trodden without the city; eternally without the city of the heavenly Jerusalem, and far from the presence of God; eternally crushed and trodden down by His justice; eternally tormented in body and soul, without any hope either of living or dying! This is the miserable lot and portion of those who shall have despised the Law of God, and died in impenitence. My God, pierce my heart with a salutary dread of thy judgments!"

Whatever the passage may mean, this is a prudent and Christian use of them.

NOTES ON CHAP. XV.

Verse 1. Seven angels having the seven last plagues] Under the emblems of harvest and vintage, God's judgments on the enemies of His church have already been pointed out: but these are farther signified by the seven vials, which are called the seven last plagues of God. The seven last plagues appear to fall under the seventh and last trumpet. As the seventh seal contained the seven trumpets; so the seventh trumpet contains the seven vials. And as seven angels sounded the seven trumpets; so seven angels are appointed to pour out the seven vials, angels being always the ministers of Providence. This chapter contains the opening vision which is preparatory to the pouring out of the vials.

The Targum of Jonathan on Isa. li. 17. Awake, awake, stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury, uses the same words employed by the evangelist here: Jerusalem, thou hast received from the face of the Lord the cup of his wrath; ית פילי כסא דלוטא Yath phaieley casa dilevata, "The PHIALS of the cup of malediction." And again, on ver. 22. I will take out of thy hand the cup of malediction; ית פילי כסא דחמתי yath PHAIALEY casa dechemti, "The PHIALS of the cup of my indignation."

Verse 2. A sea of glass] A spacious lucid plain around the throne, from which fiery corruscations were continually emitted: or, the reflection of the light upon this lucid plain produced the prismatic colours of the most vivid rainbow.

Over the beast, and over his image] See the Notes on chap. xiii.

Verse 3. They sing the song of Moses] That which Moses sang, Exod. xv. 1. when he and the Israelites, by the miraculous power of God, had got safely through the Red Sea, and saw their enemies all destroyed.

And the song of the Lamb] The same song, adapted to the state of the suffering, but now delivered Christians.

Great and marvellous are thy works] God's works are descriptive of His infinite power and wisdom.

Lord God Almighty] Nearly the same as Jehovah, God of hosts.

Just and true are thy ways] Every step God takes, in grace or providence, is according to justice; and He carefully accomplishes all His threatenings, and all His promises: to this He is bound by His truth.

Verse 4. Who shall not fear thee] That is, all should fear and worship this true God, because He is just, and true, and holy: and His saints should love and obey Him, because He is their King; and they and all men should acknowledge His judgments, because they are made manifest.

Verse 5. The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony] The temple which succeeded the tabernacle; in which was the testimony, viz. the two tables; Aaron's rod; pot of manna; holy anointing oil, &c. All bearing testimony to the truth of God, and His miraculous interposition in their behalf.

Verse 6. The seven angels came out of the temple] To show that they were sent from God Himself.

Clothed in pure and white linen] Habited as priests. For these habits see Exod. xxviii. 6, 8. and see the Note on ch. i. ver. 13.

breasts girded with golden girdles.

7 [a] And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, [b] who liveth for ever and ever.

8 And [c] the temple was filled with smoke [d] from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

Verse 8. The temple was filled with smoke] So was the tabernacle when consecrated by Moses, Exod. xl. 34, 35. and the temple when consecrated by Solomon, 1 Kings viii. 10, 11. 2 Chron. v. 14. See Isa. vi. 4. This account seems at least partly copied from those above.

When the high priest entered in the holy of holies, and the ordinary priest into the holy place, they always carried with them a great deal of smoking incense, which filled those places with smoke and darkness, which prevented them from considering, too attentively, the parts and ornaments of those holy places; and thus served to produce an air of majesty in the temple, which none dared to approach without the deepest reverence. To this, Calmet thinks, the allusion may be here.

CHAPTER XVI.

The angels are commanded to pour out their vials upon the earth, 1. The first pours out his vial on the earth, by which a grievous sore is produced, 2. The second angel pours out his vial on the sea, and it is turned into blood, 3. The third angel pours out his vial on the rivers and fountains, and they are turned also into blood, 4—7. The fourth angel pours out his vial on the sun, and men are scorched with fire, 8, 9. The fifth angel pours out his vial on the throne of the beast, 10, 11. The sixth angel pours out his vial on the river Euphrates, 12. Three unclean spirits come out of the mouth of the beast, dragon, and false prophet; and go forth to gather all the kings of the world to battle, in the place called Armageddon, 13—16. The seventh angel pours out his vial on the air, on which followed thunders, lightnings, earthquakes, and extraordinary hail, 17—21.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVI.

Verse 1. Go your ways, and pour out] These ministers of the Divine justice, were ready to execute vengeance upon transgressors, having full power, but could do nothing in this way till they received especial commission. Nothing can be done without the permission of God; and in the manifestation of justice or mercy by Divine agency, there must be positive command.

Verse 2. A noisome and grievous sore] This is a reference to the sixth Egyptian plague, biles and blains, Exod. ix. 8, &c.

Verse 3. As the blood of a dead man] Either meaning blood in a state of putrescency; or an effusion of blood in naval conflicts; even the sea was tinged with the blood of those who were slain in these wars. This is most probably the meaning of this vial. These engagements were so san-

6 For [e] they have shed the blood [f] of saints and prophets, [g] and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy.

7 And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, [h] Lord God Almighty, [i] true and righteous are thy judgments.

guinary, that both the conquerors and the conquered were nearly destroyed: every living soul died in the sea.

Verse 4. Upon the rivers and fountains of waters] This is an allusion to the first Egyptian plague, Exod. vii. 20—and to those plagues in general there are allusions throughout this chapter. It is a sentiment of the Rabbins, that "whatever plagues God inflicted on the Egyptians in former times, He will inflict on the enemies of his people in all later times."—See a long quotation on this subject from Rabbi Tanchum, in Schoettgen.

Verse 5. The angel of the waters] The Rabbins attribute angels not only to the four elements so called; but to almost every thing besides. We have already seen the angel of the bottomless pit, ch. ix. 11. and the angel of the fire, ch. xiv. 18. The angel of the earth is spoken of in Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 13. 2. and is called Admael. They have also an angel that presides over the grass; and another that presides over the cattle which feed upon the grass.

They say that God employed the angel of the sea to swallow up the waters at the creation, that the dry land might appear. He disobeyed, and God slew him; the name of the angel of the sea is Rahab. See Baba bathra, fol. 74. 2. It is plain from several places, that the writer of the Apocalypse keeps these notions distinctly in view.

Verse 6. Thou hast given them blood to drink] They thirsted after blood, and massacred the saints of God; and now they have got blood to drink! It is said, that when Tomyris, queen of the Scythians, had vanquished Cyrus, she cut off his head, and threw it into a vessel of blood, saying these words:—Satia te sanguine, quem sitisti, cujusque insatiabilis semper fuisti: "Satisfy thyself with blood, for which thou hast thirsted; and for which thy desire has been insatiable."—See Justin. Hist. lib. i. c. 8. This figure of speech is called sarcasm in rhetoric.

> Cyrus, thy thirst was blood; now drink thy fill."

Verse 8. Poured out his vial upon the sun] Mr. Robert Fleming, more than one hundred years ago, in his View of Scripture Prophecy supposed that the sun here meant the French empire; and conjectured that this vial would be poured out on that empire about the year 1794. And it is remarkable that in 1793 the French king was beheaded by the National Assembly; and great and unparalleled miseries fell upon the French nation, which nearly extinguished all their nobility, and brought about a war that has lasted twenty-three years, and has nearly ruined that country, and all the nations of Europe.

Verse 9. They repented not] No moral national amendment has taken place in consequence of the above calamities in that unhappy country; nor indeed any of those nations engaged against her, in that long and ruinous contest, which has now terminated (1817,) without producing one political, moral, or religious advantage to herself, or to Europe.

Verse 10. The seat of the beast] Επι τον θρονον του θηριου, upon the throne of the wild beast. The regal family was smitten by the fourth vial; they did not repent: then the fifth angel pours out his vial on the throne of the wild beast, or antichristian idolatrous power.

Was full of darkness] Confusion, dismay, and distress.

they repent; therefore other judgments must follow. Some think that the sun was Vitellius, the Roman emperor; and that his throne means Rome; and the darkening refers to the injuries she sustained in her political consequence by the civil wars which then took place, from which she never entirely recovered. Others apply it all to Papal Rome; and in this respect make out a very clear case! Thus have men conjectured; but how much nearer are we to the truth?

Verse 12. On the great river Euphrates] Probably meaning the people in the vicinity of this river; though some think that the Tiber is intended.

The water thereof was dried up] The people discomfited, and all impediments removed.

The kings of the east] There seems to be an allusion here to the ruin of Babylon by Cyrus, predicted by the prophet Jerem. chap. l. and li. But what city or people is pointed out by this Babylon is in vain to conjecture.

Verse 13. Three unclean spirits] Perhaps false teachers, called afterward spirits of devils, which persuade the kings of the earth by lying miracles to come forth to the place of general slaughter, ver. 14, 16.

Some good critics apply this to Vespasian, and his pretended miracles.—See the account in Tacitus, lib. iv. c. 81.

Verse 15. Behold, I come as a thief] Here is a sudden but timely warning, to put every man on his guard, when this sudden and generally unexpected tribulation should take place.

Keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked] Here is a plain allusion to the office of him who was called the præfect, or overseer, of the mountain of the temple. His custom was to go his rounds during the watches of the night; and if he found one of the Levites sleeping on his watch, he had authority to beat him with a stick, and burn his vestments.—See Middoth, fol. 34. 1. and Tamid. fol. 27. 2., 28. 1. Such a person being found on his return home naked, it was at once known that he had been found asleep at his post; had been beaten, and his clothes burnt: thus his shame was seen; he was reproached for his infidelity and irreligion.

Verse 16. Armageddon.] The original of this word has been variously formed, and variously translated. It is הר־מגדון har-megiddon, "the mount of the assembly;" or חרמה גדהון chormah gedehon, "the destruction of their army;" or it is הר־מגדו Har megiddo, "Mount Megiddo; the valley of which was remarkable for two great slaughters: one of the Israelites, 2 Kings xxiii. 29., the other of the Canaanites, Judg. iv. 16. v. 19. But Mount Megiddo, that is, Carmel, is the place, according to some, where these armies should be collected.

But what is the battle of Armageddon? How ridiculous have been the conjectures of men relative to this point? Within the last twenty years this battle has been fought at various places, according to our purblind seers, and self-inspired prophets! At one time it was Austerlitz, at another Moscow, at another Leipsic, and now Waterloo! And thus they have gone on, and will go on, confounding and being confounded.

Verse 17. Poured out his vial into the air] To signify that this plague was to be widely diffused; and perhaps to intimate that pestilences and various deaths would be the effect of this vial. But possibly air, in this place, may have some emblematical meaning.

It is done] It is said, chap. x. 7., that in the days of the seventh trumpet the mystery of God should be finished; so here we find it completed. Γεγονε· All's over! Fuimus Troes! Ilium fuit! Once there were Trojans, and they had a city; but now all are extinct.

Verse 18. A great earthquake] Most terrible commotions, both civil and religious. Or, a convulsion, shaking, or revolution.

Verse 19. The great city] Some say Jerusalem; others, Rome Pagan; others, Rome Papal.

The cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath.] Alluding to the mode of putting certain criminals to death, by making them drink a cup of poison.—See on Heb. ii. 9.

Verse 20. Every island fled away] Probably meaning the capture of sea-port towns, and fortified places.

Verse 21. A great hail—about the weight of a talent] Has this any reference to cannon balls, and bombs? It is very doubtful; we are all in the dark in these matters.

The word ως ταλαντιαια, as a talent, are used to express something great, excessively oppressive; as νοσηματων ταλαντιαιων, terrible diseases; not diseases of the weight of a talent.—See Rosenmüller.

This chapter is, on several accounts, very important; and particularly as it appears to explain several of the most remarkable symbols in the Book. The same author, who has written so largely on the xiith and xiiith chapters, has also obliged me with his interpretation of this chapter. Not pretending to explain these things myself, I insert this as the most elaborate and learned exposition I have yet seen; leaving my readers at perfect liberty to reject it, and adopt any other mode of interpretation which they please. God alone knows all the secrets of His own wisdom.

frequently represented in Scripture under the character of a whore, or whoredom, is evident from numerous passages which it is unnecessary to quote.—See 1 Chron. v. 25. Ezek. xvi. xxiii. &c. The woman mentioned here is called a great whore, to denote her excessive depravity, and the awful nature of her idolatry. She is also represented as sitting upon many waters, to show the vast extent of her influence.—See on ver. 13.

Verse 2. With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.] What an awful picture this is of the state of the religion of the world, in subjection to this whore. Kings have committed spiritual fornication with her, and their subjects have drunk deep, dreadfully deep, into the doctrine of her abominable errors.

Verse 3. So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness] This wilderness into which the apostle was carried, is the desolate state of the true church of Christ, in one of the wings of the once mighty Roman empire. It was a truly awful sight, a terrible desert, a waste-howling wilderness; for when he came thither, he—Saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.] No doubt can now be entertained that this woman is the Latin church; for she sits upon the beast with seven heads and ten horns, which has been already proved to be the Latin empire, because this empire alone contains the number 666.—See on chap. xiii. This is a representation of the Latin church in her highest state of antichristian prosperity; for she SITS UPON the scarlet-coloured beast, a striking emblem of her complete domination over the secular Latin empire. The state of the Latin church from the commencement of the fourteenth century to the time of the Reformation, may be considered that which corresponds to this prophetic description in the most literal and extensive sense of the words: for during this period she was at her highest pitch of worldly grandeur and temporal authority. The beast is full of names of blasphemy; and it is well known that the nations, in support of the Latin or Romish church, have abounded in blasphemous appellations, and have not blushed to attribute to themselves and to their church the most sacred titles; not only blaspheming by the improper use of sacred names, but even by applying to its bishop those names which alone belong to God; for God hath expressly declared that He will not give his glory to another, neither his praise to graven images.

Verse 4. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication] This strikingly represents the most pompous and costly manner in which the Latin church has held forth to the nations the rites and ceremonies of its idolatrous and corrupt worship.

Verse 5. And upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and Abominations of the Earth.] This inscription being written upon her forehead is intended to show that she is not ashamed of her doctrines, but publicly professes and glories in them before the nations: she has, indeed, a whore's forehead; she has refused to be ashamed. The inscription upon her forehead is exactly the portraiture of the Latin church. This church is, as Bishop Newton well expresses it, A MYSTERY of iniquity. This woman is also called Babylon the Great; she is the exact antitype of the ancient Babylon in her idolatry and cruelty; but the ancient city called Babylon is only a drawing of her in miniature. This is, indeed, Babylon THE GREAT. "She affects the style and title of our HOLY MOTHER the CHURCH; but she is, in truth, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth."

Verse 6. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood

her, I wondered with great admiration.

7 And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns.

8 The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and [a] shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and [b] go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth [c] shall wonder, [d] whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is.

of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration.] How exactly the cruelties exercised by the Latin church against all it has denominated heretics correspond with this description, the Reader need not be informed.

Verse 7. And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast which carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns.] The apostle was greatly astonished, as well he might, at the woman's being drunk with the blood of the saints, when the beast which carried her abounded with sacred appellations, such as holy, most holy, most Christian, sacred, most sacred. The angel undertakes to explain to St. John the vision, which had excited in him so great astonishment; and the explication is of such great importance, that, had it not been given, the mystery of the dragon and the beast could never have been satisfactorily explained in all its particulars. The angel begins with saying—

Verse 8. The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition] The beast is the Latin kingdom, (Ἡ Λατινη βασιλεια;) consequently the beast was, that is, was in existence previously to the time of St. John, for Latinus was the first king of the Latins, and Numitor the last; is not now, because the Latin nation has ceased long ago to be an independent power, and is now under the dominion of the Romans; but shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, that is, the Latin kingdom, the antichristian power, or that which ascendeth out of the abyss, or bottomless pit, is yet in futurity. But it is added—

And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder (whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world,) when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is.] By the earth is here meant the Latin world; therefore the meaning is, that all who dwell in the Latin world shall adhere to the idolatrous and blasphemous religion of the Latin church, which is supported by the Latin empire, except those who abide by the Sacred Scriptures, receiving them as the only rule of faith and practice. These believe in the true Sacrifice, and keep themselves unspotted from the corruption that is in the world. But the inhabitants of the Latin world, under the dominion of the Romish religion, shall wonder when they behold the beast, or Latin empire; that is, as Lord Napier remarks, "shall have in great admiration, reuerence, and estimation, this great monarchie." They shall wonder at it, by considering it the most sacred empire in the world, that in which God peculiarly delights: but those that so wonder have not their names written in the book of life, but are such as prefer councils to Divine revelation, and take their religion from missals, rituals, and legends, instead of the Sacred Oracles; hence they are corrupt and idolatrous, and no idolater hath inheritance in the kingdom of God. In the preceding part of the verse, the beast is considered in three states, as that which was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit; here a fourth is introduced, and yet is. This is added to show that, though the Latins were subjugated by the Romans, nevertheless the Romans themselves were Latins; for Romulus, the founder of their monarchy, was a Latin; consequently that denominated in St. John's days the Roman empire, was, in reality, the Latin kingdom, for the very language of the empire was the Latin; and the Greek writers, who lived in the time of the Roman empire, expressly tell us that those formerly called Latins are now named Romans. The meaning of the whole verse is, therefore, as follows: the corrupt part of mankind shall have in great admiration the Latin empire yet in futurity, which has already been, but is now extinct, the Romans having conquered it; and yet is still in being, for though the Latin nation has been subjugated, its conquerors are themselves Latins. But it may be objected against the interpretation here given, that these phrases are spoken of the beast upon which the apostle saw the woman, or Latin church, sit; for the angel says, the beast that THOU SAWEST was, and is not, &c.; what reference, therefore, can the Latin empire, which supports the Latin church, have to the Latin kingdom which subsisted before St. John's time, or to the Roman empire which might properly be so denominated? This objection has very great weight at first sight; and cannot be answered satisfactorily till the angel's explanation of the heads and horns of the beast have been examined; therefore it is added—

Verse 9. Here is the mind which hath wisdom] It was said before, chap. xiii. 18. Here is wisdom: let him that hath A MIND, or understanding, (νουν) count the number of the beast. Wisdom, therefore, here means a correct view of what is intended by the number 666; consequently, the parallel passage Here is THE MIND which hath WISDOM, is a declaration that the number of the beast must first be understood, before the angel's interpretation of the vision concerning the whore and the beast can admit of a satisfactory explanation.

The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth.] This verse has been almost universally considered to allude to the seven hills upon which Rome originally stood. But it has been objected that modern Rome is not thus situated; and that, consequently, Pagan Rome is intended in the prophecy. This is certainly a very formidable objection against the generally received opinion among Protestants that Papal Rome is the city meant by the woman sitting upon seven mountains. It has been already shown that the woman here mentioned is an emblem of the Latin church in her highest state of antichristian prosperity; and therefore the city of Rome, seated upon seven mountains, is not at all designed in the prophecy. In order to understand this Scripture aright the word mountains must be taken in a figurative and not a literal sense, as in chap. vi. 14. and xvi. 20. See also Isa. ii. 2, 14. Jer. li. 25. Dan. ii. 35, &c. in which it is unequivocally the emblem of great and mighty power. The mountains upon which the woman sitteth must be, therefore, seven great powers; and as the mountains are heads of the beast, they must be the seven GREATEST eminences of the Latin world. As no other power was acknowledged at the head of the Latin empire but that of Germany, how can it be said that the beast has seven heads? This question can only be solved by the feudal constitution of the late Germanic league; the history of which is briefly as follows:—At first kings alone granted fiefs. They granted them to laymen only, and to such only who were free; and the vassal had no power to alienate them. Every freeman, and particularly the feudal tenants, were subject to the obligation of military duty, and appointed to guard their sovereign's life, member, mind, and right honour. Soon after, or perhaps a little before, the extinction of the Carlovingian dynasty in France, by the accession of the Capetian line, and in Germany by the accession of the house of Saxony, fiefs, which had been entirely at the disposal of the sovereign, became hereditary. Even the offices of duke, count, margrave, &c. were transmitted in the course of hereditary descent; and not long after the right of primogeniture was universally established. The crown-vassals usurped the sovereign property of the land, with civil and military authority over the inhabitants. The possession thus usurped they granted out to their immediate tenants; and these granted them over to others, in like manner. Thus the principal vassals gradually obtained every royal prerogative: they promulgated laws, exercised the power of life and death, coined money, fixed the standard of weights and measures, granted safeguards, entertained a military force, and imposed taxes, with every right supposed to be annexed to royalty. In their titles they styled themselves dukes, &c. Dei gratiâ, by the grace of God, a prerogative avowedly confined to sovereign power. It was even admitted that, if the king refused to do the lord justice, the lord might make war upon him. The tenants, in their turn, made themselves independent of their vassal-lords, by which was introduced an ulterior state of vassalage. The king was called the sovereign lord, his immediate vassal was called the suzereign, and the tenants holding of him were called the arrere vassals. (See Butler's Revolutions of the Germanic Empire, pp. 54—66.) Thus the power of the emperors of Germany, which was so very considerable in the ninth century, was gradually diminished by the means of the feudal system; and, during the anarchy of the long interregnum, occasioned by the interference of the Popes in the election of the emperors (from 1256 to 1273,) the imperial power was reduced almost to nothing. Rudolph of Hapsburgh, the founder of the house of Austria, was at length elected emperor, because his territories and influence were so inconsiderable as to excite no jealousy in the German princes, who were willing to preserve the forms of constitution, the power and vigour of which they had destroyed.—See Robertson's Introduction to his History of Charles V. Before the dissolution of the empire, in 1806, Germany "presented a complex association of principalities more or less powerful, and more or less connected, with a nominal sovereignty in the emperor, as its supreme feudal chief." There were about three hundred princes of the empire, each sovereign in his own country, and might enter into alliances, and pursue by all political measures his own private interest, as other sovereigns do; for if even an imperial war were declared, he might remain neuter, if the safety of the empire were not at stake. Here then was an empire of a construction, without exception, the most singular and intricate that ever appeared in the world; for the emperor was only the chief of the Germanic confederation." Germany was, therefore, speaking in the figurative language of Scripture, a country abounding in kills, or containing an immense number of distinct principalities. But the different German states, (as has been before observed,) did not each possess an equal share of power and influence; some were more eminent than others. Among them there were also a few which might, with the greatest propriety, be denominated mountains, or states possessing a very high degree of political importance.—But the seven mountains on which the woman sits must have their elevations above all the other eminences in the whole Latin world; consequently, they can be no other than the SEVEN ELECTORATES of the German empire. These were, indeed, mountains of vast eminence; for in their sovereigns was vested the sole power of electing the head of the empire. But this was not all; for, besides the power of electing an emperor, the electors had a right to capitulate with the new head of the empire, to dictate the conditions on which he was to reign, and to depose him if he broke those conditions. They actually deposed Adolphus of Nassau in 1298, and Wenceslaus in 1400. They were sovereign and independent princes in their respective dominions, had the privilegium de non appellando illimitatum, that of making war, coining, and exercising every act of sovereignty; they formed a separate college in the diet of the empire, and had among themselves a particular covenant, or league, called Kur verein; they had precedence of all the other princes of the empire, and even ranked with kings. The heads of the beast, understood in this way, is one of the finest emblems of the German constitution which can possibly be conceived; for as the Roman empire of Germany had the precedence of all the other monarchies of which the Latin empire was composed, the seven mountains very fitly denote the seven PRINCIPAL powers of what has been named the Holy Roman empire. And, also, as each electorate, by virtue of its union with the Germanic body, was more powerful than any other Roman Catholic state of Europe not so united; so was each electorate, in the most proper sense of the word, one of the highest elevations in the Latin world. The time when the seven electorates of the empire were first instituted, is very uncertain. The most probable opinion appears to be that which places their origin some time in the thirteenth century. The uncertainty, however, in this respect, does not in the least weaken the evidence of the mountains being the seven electorates, but rather confirms it; for, as we have already observed, the representation of the woman sitting upon the beast, is a figure of the Latin church in the period of her greatest authority, spiritual and temporal; this we know did not take place before the commencement of the fourteenth century, a period subsequent to the institution of the seven electorates. Therefore the woman sits upon the seven mountains, or the German empire in its elective aristocratical state: she is said to sit upon them, to denote that she has the whole German empire under her direction and authority, and also that it is her chief support and stength. Supported by Germany, she is under no apprehension of being successfully opposed by any other power: she sits upon the seven mountains, therefore she is higher than the seven highest eminences of the Latin world; she must, therefore, have the secular Latin empire under her complete subjection. But this state of eminence did not continue above two or three centuries: the visible declension of the Papal power in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, occasioned partly by the removal of the Papal see from Rome to Avignon, and more particularly by the great schism from 1377 to 1417, though considered one of the remote causes of the Reformation, was at first the means of merely transferring the supreme power from the Pope to a general council, while the dominion of the Latin church remained much the same. At the council of Constance, March 30, 1415, it was decreed "that the synod being lawfully assembled in the name of the Holy Ghost, which constituted the general council, and represented the whole Catholic church militant, had its power immediately from Jesus Christ; and that every person, of whatsoever state or dignity, EVEN THE POPE HIMSELF, is obliged to obey it in what concerns the faith, the extirpation of schism, and the general reformation of the church in its head and members." The council of Basil, of 1432, decreed "that every one of whatever dignity or condition, NOT EXCEPTING THE POPE HIMSELF, who shall refuse to obey the ordinances and decrees of this general council, or any other, shall be put under penance, and punished. It is also declared that the POPE has no power to dissolve the general council without the consent and decree of the assembly."—See the third Tome of Du Pin's Ecclesiastical History. But what gave the deathblow to the temporal sovereignty of the Latin church was the light of the glorious Reformation, which first broke out in Germany in 1517; and in a very few years gained its way not only over several of the great principalities of Germany but was also made the established religion of other Popish countries. Consequently, in the sixteenth century the woman no longer sat upon the seven mountains, the electorates not only having refused to be ruled by her, but some of them having also despised and abandoned her doctrines. The changes, therefore, which were made in the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries in the number of the electorates will not affect in the least the interpretation of the seven mountains already given. The seven electors were the archbishops of Mentz, Cologne, and Triers, the count palatine of the Rhine, the duke of Saxony, the marquis of Brandenburgh, and the king of Bohemia. But the heads of the beast have a double signification, for the angel says,

Verse 10. And there are seven kings] Και βασιλεις επτα εισιν, they are also seven kings. Before it was said, they are seven mountains; here, they are also seven kings, which is a demonstration that kingdoms are not here meant by mountains; and this is a farther argument that the seven electorates are represented by seven mountains, for though the sovereigns of these states ranked with kings, they were not kings; that is to say, they were not absolute and sole lords of the territories they possessed, independently of the emperor; for their states formed a part of the Germanic body. But the seven heads of the beast are also seven kings; that is to say, the Latin Empire has had seven supreme forms of government; for king is used in the prophetical writings for any supreme governor of a state or people, as is evident from Deut. xxxiii. 5. where Moses is called a king. Of these seven kings, or supreme forms of Latin government, the angel informs St. John

Five are fallen, and one is] It is well known that the first form of Latin government was that of kings, which continued after the death of Latinus 428 years, till the building of Rome, B. C. 753. After Numitor's decease, the Albans, or Latins, instituted the form of a republic, and were governed by dictators. We have only the names of two, viz. Cluilius and Metius Fufetius or Suffetius; but as the dictatorship continued at least eighty-eight years, there might have been others, though their names and actions are unknown. In the year before Christ 665, Alba, the metropolis of the Latin nation, was destroyed by Tullus Hostilius, the third king of the Romans, and the inhabitants carried to Rome. This put an end to the monarchical republic of the Latins; and the Latins elected two annual magistrates, whom Licinius calls dictators, but who are called prætors by other writers. This form of government continued till the time of P. Decius Mus, the Roman consul; for Festus, in his fourteenth book, informs us, "that the Albans enjoyed prosperity till the time of King Tullus; but that Alba being then destroyed, the consuls, till the time of P. Decius Mus, held a consultation with the Latins at the head of Ferentina, and the empire was governed by the council of both nations." The Latin nation was entirely subjugated by the Romans B. C. 336, which put an end to the government by prætors, after it had continued upwards of three hundred years. The Latins from this time ceased to be a nation, as it respects the name; therefore the three forms of government already mentioned were those which the Latins had during that period which the angel speaks of, when he says, the beast which thou sawest WAS. But as five heads, or forms of government, had fallen before St. John's time, it is evident that the two other forms of government which had fallen, must be among those of the Romans; first, because though the Latin nation so called was deprived of all authority by the Romans, yet the Latin power continued to exist, for the very conquerors of the Latin nation were Latins; and, consequently, the Latins, though a conquered people, continued to have a LATIN Government. Secondly, the angel expressly says when speaking to St. John, that one is, that is, the sixth head, or Latin form of government, was then in existence, which could be no other than the imperial power, this being the only independent form of Latin government in the apostolic age. It therefore necessarily follows, that the Roman forms of government by which Latium was ruled, must be the remaining heads of the beast. Before the subjugation of the Latins by the Roman, four of the Roman or Draconic forms of government had fallen, the regal power, the dictatorship, the decemvirate, and the consular power of the military tribunes; the last of which was abolished about 366 years before the commencement of the Christian era; none of these, therefore, ruled over the WHOLE Latin nation. But as the Latins were finally subdued about 336 B. C. the consular government of the Romans, which was then the supreme power in the state, must be the fourth head of the beast. This form of government continued, with very little interruption, till the rising up of the triumvirate, the fifth head of the beast, B. C. 43. The dictatorship of Sylla and Julius Cæsar could not be considered a new head of the beast, as the Latins had already been ruled by it in the persons of Cluilius and Fufetius. The sixth head of the beast, or that which existed in the time of St. John, was, consequently, as we have already proved, the imperial power of the Heathen Cæsars, or the seventh draconic form of government.

And the other is not yet come] Bishop Newton considers the Roman duchy, under the eastern emperor's lieutenant, the exarch of Ravenna, the seventh head of the beast. But this cannot be the form of government signified by the seventh head, for a head of the beast, as we have already shown, is a supreme independent form of Latin government; consequently, the Roman duchy cannot be the seventh head, as it was dependent upon the exarchate of Ravenna; and the exarchate cannot be the head, as it was itself in subjection to the Greek empire. The Rev. G. Faber has ascertained the truth exactly, in denominating the Carlovingian patriciate the seventh head of the beast. That this was a supreme independent form of government is evident from history. Gibbon, in speaking of the patriciate, observes, that "the decrees of the senate and people successively invested Charles Martel and his posterity with the honours of patrician of Rome. The leaders—of a powerful nation would have disdained a servile title and subordinate office; but the reign of the Greek emperors was suspended; and, in the vacancy of the empire, they derived a more glorious commission from the Pope and the republic. The Roman ambassadors presented these patricians with the keys of the shrine of St. Peter, as a pledge and symbol of sovereignty; and with a holy banner, which it was their right and duty to unfurl in defence of the church and city. In the time of Charles Martel and of Pepin the interposition of the Lombard kingdom covered the freedom, while it threatened the safety, of Rome; and the patricate represented only the title, the service, the alliance, of these distant protectors. The power and policy of Charlemagne annihilated an enemy, and imposed a master. In his first visit to the capital, he was received with all the honours which had formerly been paid to the exarch, the representative of the emperor; and these honours obtained some new decorations from the joy and gratitude of Pope Adrian I.—In the portico Adrian ex pected him at the head of his clergy; they embraced as friends and equals: but, in their march to the altar, the king, or patrician, assumed the right hand of the Pope. Nor was the Frank content with these vain and empty demonstrations of respect. In the twenty-six years that elapsed between the conquest of Lombardy and his imperial coronation, Rome, which had been delivered by the sword, was subject, as his own, to the sceptre of Charlemagne. The people swore allegiance to his person and family; in his name money was coined, and justice was administered; and the election of the Popes was examined and confirmed by his authority. Except an original and self-inherent claim of sovereignty, there was not any prerogative remaining which the title of emperor could add to the patrician of Rome." The seven heads of the beast are, therefore, the following: The Regal power, The Dictatorship, The power of the Prætors, The Consulate, The Triumvirate, The Imperial power, and The Patriciate.

And when he cometh, he must continue a short space] The seventh form of government was only to remain a short time, which was actually the case; for from its first rise to independent power to its utter extinction, there passed only about forty-five years, a short time in comparison to the duration of several of the preceding forms of goverment; for the primitive regal government continued at least four hundred and twenty-eight years; the dictatorship was in power about eighty-eight years; the power of the prætors was in being for upwards of three hundred years; the consulate lasted about two hundred and eighty years; and the imperial power continued upwards of five hundred years.

Verse 11. And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition.] That is to say, the Latin kingdom that has already been, but is now no longer nominally in existence, shall immediately follow the dissolution of the seventh form of Latin government; and this dominion is called ογδοος, an eighth, because it succeeds to the seventh. Yet it is not an eighth head of the beast, because the beast has only seven heads; for, to constitute a new head of the beast, the form of government must not only differ in nature, but also in name. This head of the beast is, therefore, εκ των επτα, ONE of the seven. Consequently, the form of government represented by this head is the restoration of one of the preceding seven. The restored head can be, therefore, no other than the regal state of the Latins, or, in other words, the Latin kingdom, (Η Λατινη βασιλεια,) which followed the patriciate, or seventh head of Latin government. But the beast, in his eighth state, or under his first head restored, goeth into perdition. No other form of Latin government shall succeed; but the beast, in his last or Antichristian condition, shall be taken, together with the false prophet that wrought miracles in his sight, "and cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."

It is observable, that the eighth Latin power is called by the angel the beast, and also one of his heads. This ap-with him are called, and chosen, and faithful.

15 And he saith unto me, [a] The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, [b] are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

16 And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, [c] these shall hate the parent discordance arises from the double signification of the heads; for if we take the beast upon which the woman sits to be merely a representation of that secular power which supports the Latin church, then the seven heads will represent the seven electorates of the Germanic empire; but if by the beast we understand the general Latin empire from first to last, then what is, according to the angel's first interpretation of the heads, called the beast, is, in this case, only one of his heads.—See on ver. 18.

Verse 12. And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet, but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.] The meaning of horns has already been defined when speaking of those of the dragon. The meaning is, therefore, as follows: Though the Latin empire be now in existence, the ten horns refer to ten Latin kingdoms yet in futurity, and consequently they have received no dominion AS YET; for that part of the Latin domination now in power is the sixth head, or imperial government of the Heathen Cæsars. But the ten states of the Latins receive dominion as monarchies μιαν ωραν, one time, (as it may be properly translated,) i. e. at the same time, with the beast, or that which ascendeth out of the bottomless pit; consequently, the Latin empire here intended, is the one which was in futurity in the apostolic age.

Verse 13. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.] Therefore the ten horns must constitute the principal strength of the Latin empire; that is to say, this empire is to be composed of the dominions of ten monarchs, independent of each other in every other sense, except in their implicit obedience to the Latin church. The beast, in this and the preceding verse, is distinguished from its horns; as the WHOLE Latin empire is distinguished in history from its constituent powers.—See on ver. 16.

Verse 14. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful.] The ten powers of the beast must compose the secular kingdom of Antichrist; for they make war with the Lamb, who is Christ Jesus. This is perfectly true of all Popish states; for they have constantly opposed, as long as they have had any secular power, the progress of pure Christianity. They make war with the Lamb by persecuting His followers: but the Lamb shall overcome them, for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings; all lords have their authority from Him, and no king can reign without Him; therefore the ten Latin kings are God's ministers, to execute His vengeance upon the idolatrous nations. But when these Antichristian monarchies have executed the Divine purpose, those that are with the Lamb, the called, the chosen, and the faithful, those who have kept the THE TRUTH in the love of it, shall prevail against all their adversaries, because their battles are fought by the Lamb, who is their God and Deliverer.—See chap. xix. 19, 20.

Verse 15. And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.] "So many words," Bishop Newton observes, "in the plural number, fitly denote the great extensiveness of her power and jurisdiction;—She herself glories in the title of the Catholic church, and exults in the number of her votaries as a certain proof of the true religion. Cardinal Bellarmin's first note of the true church is, the very name of the Catholic church: and his fourth note is, amplitude, or multitude, and variety of believers; for the truly Catholic church, says he, ought not only to comprehend all ages, but likewise all places, all nations, all kinds of men."

Verse 16. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.] Here is a clue to lead us to the right interpretation of the horns of the beast. It is said the TEN horns shall hate the whore; by which is evidently meant, when connected with what follows, that the whole of the ten kingdoms in the interest of the Latin church, shall finally despise her doctrines, be reformed from Popery, assist in depriving her of all influence, and in exposing her follies; and in the end consign her to utter destruction. From this it follows, that no Roman Catholic power which did not exist so late as the Reformation, can be numbered among the horns of the beast; the horns must, therefore, be found among the great states of Europe at the commencement of the Reformation. These were exactly ten, viz. France, Spain, England, Scotland, The Empire, Sweden, Denmark, Poland, Hungary, and Portugal. In these were comprehended most of the minor states not styled monarchies; and which, from their first rise to the period of the Reformation, had been subdued by one or more of the ten grand Roman Catholic powers already named. Consequently, these ten constituted the power and strength of the beast; and each minor state is considered a part of that monarchy under the authority of which it was finally reduced previously to the Reformation.

whore, and shall make her desolate [a] and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and [b] burn her with fire.

But, it may be asked, how could the empire, which was the revived head of the beast, have been at the same time one of its horns? The answer is as follows: horns of an animal, in the language of prophecy, represent the powers of which that empire or kingdom symbolized by the animal is composed. Thus the angel, in his interpretation of Daniel's vision of the ram and he-goat, expressly informs us, that "the ram with two horns are the kings of Media and Persia." One of the horns of the ram, therefore, represented the kingdom of Media, and the other the kingdom of Persia; and their union in one animal denoted the united kingdom of Media and Persia, viz. the Medo-Persian empire. In like manner the beast with ten horns denotes that the empire represented by the beast is composed of ten distinct powers; and the ten horns being united in one beast, very appropriately show that the monarchies symbolized by these horns are united together to form one empire; for we have already shown, in the Notes on chap. xiii. ver. 1. that a beast is the symbol of an empire. Therefore, as the horns of an animal, agreeably to the angel's explanation, (and we can have no higher authority) represent all the powers of which that domination symbolized by the animal is composed, the Roman empire of Germany, as one of those monarchies which gave their power and strength to the Latin empire, must, consequently, have been A HORN of the beast. But the Germanic empire was not only a LATIN power, but at the same time was acknowledged by all Europe to have precedency of all the others. Therefore, as it is not possible to express these two circumstances by one symbol, it necessarily follows, from the nature of symbolical language, that what has been named the Holy Roman empire must have a double representation. Hence the empire, as one of the powers of the Latin monarchy, was a horn of the beast, and in having precedency of all the others was its revived head.—See a similar explanation of the tail of the dragon in the Notes on chap. xii. ver. 4.

Verse 17. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled.] Let no one imagine that these ten Latin kingdoms, because they support an idolatrous worship, have been raised up merely by the power of man, or the chances of war. No kingdom or state can exist without the will of God; therefore let the inhabitants of the world tremble, when they see a wicked monarchy rise to power; and let them consider that it is raised up by the Lord to execute His vengeance upon the idolatries and profligacies of the times. It is said of the kings in communion with the church of Rome, that God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will. How is this Divine will accomplished? In the most awful and afflictive manner! In causing ten Latin kings to unite their dominions into one mighty empire for the defence of the Latin church. Here is a dreadful dispensation of Jehovah; but it is such as the nations have most righteously deserved, because when they had the truth, they lived not according to its most holy requisitions, but loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. Therefore hath "the Lord sent them strong delusion that they should believe a lie, that they might all be damned who believe not truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness." But this deplorable state of the world is not perpetual; it can only continue till every word of God is fulfilled upon His enemies; and when this time arrives, (which will be that of Christ's second advent,) then shall the Son of God slay that wicked "with the spirit of His mouth, and shall consume him with the brightness of HIS COMING."

Verse 18. And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.] It has already been shown that the woman sitting upon the seven-headed beast, is a representation of the Latin church; here we have the greatest assurance that it is so, because the woman is called a city, which is a much plainer emblem of a church, as the word is used unequivocally in this sense in so many parts of Scripture that we cannot well mistake its meaning.—See chap. iii. 12. xi. 2. xxi. 10. xxii. 19. and also Psa. xlvi. 4. lxxxvii. 3. Heb. xii. 22. &c. The woman, therefore, must be the Latin church; and as the apostle saw her sitting upon the beast, this must signify that ἡ ἐχουσα βασιλειαν, she hath A KINGDOM over the kings of the earth, i. e. over the kings of the Latin world, for that this is the meaning of earth has been shown before in numerous instances. That KINGDOM which the woman has over the kings of the Latin world, or secular Latin empire, or, in other words, THE KINGDOM of the Latin church, is the numbered Latin kingdom, or Romish hierarchy.—See on ch. xiii.

18. The woman is also called a GREAT city, to denote the very great extent of her jurisdiction; for she has comprehended within her walls the subjects of the mighty dominations of France, Spain, England, Scotland, The Empire, Sweden, Denmark, Poland, Hungary, and Portugal. What an extensive city was this! Surely such as to justify the prophetic denomination that GREAT city.

Having now gone through the whole of the angel's interpretation of St. John's vision of a whore sitting upon the seven-headed and ten-horned beast, it will be essentially necessary to examine a little more attentively the eighth verse of this chapter. It has already been shown that the phrases was, is not, shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and yet is, refer to the Latin kingdom which existed before the building of Rome; to the Roman empire in the time of St. John; and to the Latin empire which was in futurity in the apostolic age. But as the words was, is not, &c. are spoken of the beast upon which the apostle saw the woman, or Latin church, sit; how can it be said of this beast that it had an existence before the date of the Apocalypse, when the woman, whom it carried, was not in being till long after this period? And what connexion has the Latin empire of the middle ages with that which derived its name from Latinus, king of the Aborigines, and was subjugated by the ancient Romans; or even with that which existed in the time of the apostle? The answer is as follows:—St. John saw the beast upon which the woman sat, with all his seven heads and ten horns. Consequently, as the angel expressly says, that five of these seven heads had already fallen in the time of the vision, it therefore necessarily follows, that the apostle must have seen that part of the Latin empire represented by the seven-headed beast, which had already been under the emblem of five heads. Therefore, the woman sat upon the beast that WAS. But it is plain, from the angel's interpretation, that the whole of the seven heads fell, before the beast upon which the woman sat, arose; and yet, the woman is represented as sitting upon the seven-headed beast, to denote, as we have before observed, that it is the Latin kingdom in its last estate, or under one of its heads restored, which is the secular kingdom of Antichrist. The beast is also said not to have any existence in the time of the vision; from which it is evident that the monarchy of the Latins, and not that of the Romans, is here intended: because the latter was in the time of the vision. Again, the beast which St. John saw had not ascended out of the bottomless pit in his time; consequently, the whole seven heads and ten horns were in futurity; for all these heads and horns rose up out of the abyss at the same time with the beast. How is this apparent contradiction reconciled? In the most plain and satisfactory manner, by means of the angel's double interpretation of the heads; for if the seven heads be taken in the sense of seven mountains (head, in the Scripture style, being a symbol of precedency as well as supremacy,) then the beast with all his heads and horns was altogether in futurity in the apostle's time, for the seven heads are the seven electorates of the German empire, and the ten horns the ten monarchies in the interest of the Latin church. Finally, the beast is said to exist in the time of the vision; therefore, the Roman empire, which governed the world, must be here alluded to; and, consequently, the phrase and yet is, is a proof that as the beast is the Latin kingdom, and this beast is said to have an existence in the time of the apostle, that the empire of the Cæsars, though generally known by the name of the Roman, is in a very proper sense the Latin kingdom, as the Latin was the language which prevailed in it. Hence the seven-headed and ten-horned beast is at once the representation of the ancient Latin power; of the Roman empire which succeeded it; and of the Latin empire which supports the Latin church. Here is then the connexion of the ancient Latin and Roman powers with that upon which the woman sits. She sits upon the beast that was and is not, because three of his heads represent the three forms of government which the ancient Latins had before they were subjugated by the Romans, viz. The Regal Power, The Dictatorship, and the Power of the Prætors. She sits upon the beast which SHALL ASCEND out of the bottomless pit, because all his seven heads, taken in the sense of mountains, were in futurity in the apostolic age. She sits upon the beast that yet is, because four of his heads represent four forms of government of the Roman or Latin empire now in existence, viz. The Consulate, The Triumvirate, the Imperial Power, and the Patriciate. It is hence evident that the beast, in the largest acceptation of this term, is a symbol of the Latin power in general from its commencement in Latinus, to the end of time; its seven heads denoting seven kings, or supreme forms of Latin government, during this period, king or kingdom, as we have already observed, being a general term in the prophetical writings for any kind of supreme governor or government, no matter by what particular name such may have been designated among men. Thus the Latin power from the time of Latinus to the death of Numitor, was the beast under the dominion of his first head; from the death of Numitor to the destruction of Alba it was the beast under the dominion of his second head; from the destruction of Alba to the final subjugation of the Latins by the Romans the beast under the dominion of his third head. And as the four Roman forms of government which were subsequent to the final conquests of the Latins, were also Latin dominations, the Latin power under these forms of government was the beast under the dominion of his fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh heads. The beast of the bottomless pit which followed the fall of all the heads of the sea-beast, or general Latin empire, is, according to the angel's interpretation, ογδοος (βασιλευς,) an EIGHTH king, i. e. an eighth species of Latin power, or, in other words, a supreme form of Latin government essentially differing from all the foregoing: yet as it is nominally the same with one of the preceding seven, it is not accounted an eighth head of the beast. The first beast of chap. xiii. is a description of the eighth or last condition of the GENERAL Latin empire, and is said to arise εκ της θαλασσης, out of the sea, because the heads are there taken in a double sense, sea being a general term to express the origin of every great empire which is raised up by the sword; but when (as in verse 11.) one of the heads of the sea-beast (viz. that secular power which is still in being, and has supported the Latin church for more than a thousand years) is peculiarly styled The Beast, the Holy Ghost, speaking of this secular Latin empire exclusively, declares it to be εκ της αβυσσου, FROM the bottomless pit.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A luminous angel proclaims the fall of Babylon, and the cause of it, 1—3. The followers of God are exhorted to come out of it, in order to escape her approaching punishment, 4—8. The kings of the earth lament her fate, 9, 10. The merchants also bewail her, 11. The articles in which she trafficked enumerated, 12—16. She is bewailed also by shipmasters, sailors, &c. 17—19. All heaven rejoices over her fall; and her final desolation is foretold, 20—24.

AND [a] after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; [b] and the earth was lightened with his glory.

2 And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, [c] Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and [d] is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and [e] a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

3 For all nations [f] have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, [g] and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the [h] abundance of her delicacies.

5 [k] For her sins have reached unto heaven, and [l] God hath remembered her iniquities.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVIII.

Verse 1. The earth was lightened with his glory.] This may refer to some extraordinary messenger of the everlasting gospel; who, by his preaching and writings, should be the means of diffusing the light of truth and true religion over the earth.

Verse 2. Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen] This is a quotation from Isa. xxi. 9. And he said, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, and all the graven images of her gods he hath broken unto the ground. This is applied by some to Rome Pagan; by others, to Rome Papal; and by others, to Jerusalem.

Is become the—hold of every foul spirit] See the parallel passages in the margin. The figures here point out the most complete destruction. A city utterly sacked and ruined; never to be rebuilt.

Verse 3. The wine of the wrath] The punishment due to her transgressions, because they have partaken with her in her sins.—See the Note on chap. xiv. 8.

Verse 4. Come out of her, my people] These words appear to be taken from Isa. xlviii. 20. Jer. l. 8. li. 6, 45. The poet Montuanus expresses this thought well:—

Vivere qui sancte cupitis, discedite Romæ;
Omnia quum liceant, non licet esse bonum.

"Ye who desire to live a godly life, depart from Rome; for although all things are lawful there, yet to be godly is unlawful."

Verse 5. Her sins have reached unto heaven] They are become so great and enormous that the long-suffering of God must give place to His justice.

Verse 6. Reward her even as she rewarded you] These and double unto her double according to her works: [a] in the cup which she hath filled [b] fill to her double.

7 [c] How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her; for she saith in her heart, I sit a [d] queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow.

8 Therefore shall her plagues come [e] in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and [f] she shall be utterly burned with fire: [g] for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.

9 And [h] the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, [i] shall bewail her, and lament for her, [k] when they shall see the smoke of her burning, words are a prophetic declaration of what shall take place: God will deal with her as she has dealt with others.

Verse 7. How much she hath glorified herself] By every act of transgression and sinful pampering of the body, she has been preparing for herself a suitable and proportionate punishment.

Verse 8. Therefore shall her plagues come] Death, by the sword of her adversaries; mourning, on account of the slaughter; and famine, the fruits of the field being destroyed by the hostile bands.

Utterly burned with fire] Of what city is this spoken? Rome Pagan has never been thus treated, Alaric and Totilas burnt only some parts with fire. Rome Papal has not been thus treated; but this is true of Jerusalem: and yet Jerusalem is not generally thought to be intended.

Verse 9. The kings of the earth] Those who copied her superstitions, and adopted her idolatries.

Verse 10. Standing afar off] Beholding her desolations with wonder and astonishment: utterly unable to afford her any kind of assistance.

Verse 11. The merchants of the earth] These are represented as mourning over her, because their traffic with her was at an end.

Bishop Bale, who applies all these things to the church of Rome, thus paraphrases the principal passages:—

"The mighty kinges and potentates of the earth, not havinge afore their eyes the love and feare of God, have committed with this whore moste vile fithynesse; abusinge themselves by many straunge or uncommanded worshippings, and byndinge themselves by othe to observe hyr lawes and customs. At the examples, doctrines, counsels, and perswasions of hyr holy whoremongers, have they broken the covenaunts of peace; battailed, oppressed, spoyled, ravished, tyrannously murthered innocents; yea, for vain foolish causes, and more vaine titles, as though there was neither heaven nor hel, God, nor accounts to be made.

"And her mitredd marchants, hyr shorne soldiers, hir masse-mongers, hyr soule-sellers, and hir mart-brokers, waxed very riche, through the sale of hir oyles, creme, salt, water, bread, orders, hallowinges, houselings, ashes, palme, waxe, frankensence, beades, crosses, candlesticks, copes, belles, organes, images, reliques, and other pedlary wares.

"They have gotten unto them pallaces and princely houses, fat pastors and parkes, meadowes and warrens, rivers and pondes, villages and towns, cities and whole provinces, with the divill and all els; besides other men's wives, daughters, mayd servantes, and children, whom they have abhominably corrupted. What profites they have drawen unto them also by the sale of great bishopricks, prelacies, promocions, benefices, tot quoties, pardons, purgatory; besides the yearely rents of cathedrall churches, abbayes, colleges, covents, for sutes and suche other.—Specially shal they be sore discontented with the matter, which have with hir committed the whordom of the spyrite, by many externe worshipings of drye waffer cakes, oyles, roods, relyques, ladyes, images, sculles, bones, chippes, olde ragges, showes, (shoes,) bootes, spurres, hattes, breches, whodes, night capes, and such like.

"And they that have lived wantonly with hir, (ver. 9,) in following hir idle observacions, in mattenses, houres, and masses; in sensinges, halowings, and font halowing; in going processions with canapye, crosse, and pyx; with banneres, stremers, and torche light; with such other gaudes to folish for children.

"Alas, alas, that great cyty, (ver. 10.) that beautiful Babilon, that blessed holy mother the church, which somtime had so many popes pardons, so many bishoppes blessinges, so many holye stacions, so many cleane remissions à pena et culpa, so many good ghostly fathers, so many religious orders, so much holy water for spirites, and Saint John's gospels, with the five woundes and the length of our Lord for drowning, is nowe decayed for ever!

"Alas, alas, who shall pray for us now? Who shall singe dirges and trentoles? Who shal spoile us of our sinnes? Who shal give us ashes and palmes? Who shal blesse us with a spade, and singe us out of purgatory when we are deade? If we lacke these things we are like to want heaven. These are the desperate complaints of the wicked."

Verse 12. The merchandise of gold, and silver, &c.] The same author, Bishop Bale, who was once a priest of the Romish church, goes on to apply all these things to that church: and whether the text have this meaning or not, they will show us something of the religious usages of his time; and the real mockery of this intolerant and superstitious church. Speaking in reference to the Reformation, and the general light that had been diffused abroad by the word of God, which was then translated into the vulgar tongue, and put into the hands of the people at large, he says:—

"They will pay no more money for the housell sippings, bottom blessings, nor for 'seest me and seest me not,' above the head and under of their chalices, which in many places be of fine gold. Neyther regarde they to kneele anye more downe, and to kisse their pontificall rings which are of the same metal. They will be no more at coste to have the ayre beaten, and the idols perfumed with their sensers at pryncipall feastes; to have their crucifixes layde upon horses, or to have them solemply borne aloft in their gaddings abroade; with the religious occupyings of their paxes, cruettes, and other jewels which be of silver.

"Neyther passe they greatly to beholde precyous stones any more in their two horned miters, whan they hallow their churches, give theyr whorishe orders, and tryumphantly muster in processions. Nor in costuous pearles in theyr copes perrours, and chysibilles, whan they be in their prelately pompous sacrifices. Men, knowing the worde of God, supposeth that their ornaments of silk, wherewith they garnishe their temples and adorne their idolles, is very blasphemous and divillish. They thinke also, that their fayre white rockets of raynes, or fine linnen cloath; their costly gray amices, of calaber and cattes tayles; theyr fresh purple gownes, whan they walke for their pleasures; and their read scarlet frockes, whan they preach lyes in the pulpit, are very superfluous and vayne.

"In their thynen wood, (whom some men call algume trees, some basill, some corall,) may be understande all theyr curious buildings of temples, abbeys, chappels, and chambers; all shrines, images, church stooles, and pews that are well payed for; all banner staves, paternoster scores, and peeces of the holy crosse.

"The vessels of ivory comprehendeth all their maundye dyshes, their offring platters, their relique chestes, their god boxes, their drinking horns, their sipping cuppes for the hiccough, their tables whereupon are charmed their chalises and vestiments; their standiches, their combes, their muske balles, their pomaunder pottes, and their dust boxes, with other toyes.

"The vessels of precious stone; which after some interpretours, are of precious stone, or after some are of most precious wood; betokeneth their costuous cuppes, or cruses of jasper, jacinct, amel, and fine beral; and their alabaster boxes, wherewith they annointe kinges, confirme children, and minister their holy whorish orders. Their pardon masers, or drinking dishes, as Saint Benit's bole, Saint Edmond's bole, Saint Giles's bole, Saint Blithe's bole, and Westminster bole, with such other holy re-liques.

"Of brasse, which containeth latten, copper, alcumine, and other harde metals, are made all their great candlesticks, holy water kettles, lampes, desks, pyllers, butterasses, bosses, bels, and many other thinges more.

"Of strong yron are the braunches made that holde up the lightes before their false gods; the tacks that sustayne them for fallinge; the lockes that save them from the robberye of thieves; their fyre pans, bars, and poolyes, with many other straunge ginnes besides.

"With marble most commonlye pave they their temples, and build strong pillers and arches in their great cathedrale churches and monasteries: they make thereof also their superalities, their tumbs, and their solemne grave stones; besides their other buildinges, with free-stone, flint, ragge, and brick, comprehended in the same.

Verse 13. And cinnamon] "By the sinamon is ment all maner of costly spyces, wherewith they bury their byshops and founders, lest they shoulde stinke when they translate them agayne to make them saintes for advauntage.

"By the smellynge odours, the swete herbes that they strewe abrode at theyr dedications and burials; besydes the damaske waters, bawmes, muskes, pomaunder, civet, and other curious confections they yet bestow upon theyr owne precious bodyes.

"The oyntmentes are such oyles as they mingle with rose water, aloes, and spike, with other mery conceits, wherwith they anoynt their holy savours and roods, to make them to sweat, and to smell sweete when they are borne abrod in procession upon their high feastfull dayes.

"Frankinsence occupye they ofte as a necessarie thinge in the sensyng of their idols, hallowinge of their paschal, conjuringe of their ploughes; besydes the blessing of their palmes, candles, ashes, and their dead men's graves, with requiescant in pace.

With wine synge they theyr masses for money, they housell the people at Easter, they wash their aultar stones upon Maundy Thursday; they fast the holy imber dayes, besydes other banketinges all the whole yeare, to kepe theyr flesh chaste.

"With oyle smere they yonge infantes at baptisme and bishopping; they grease their massmongers, and geve them the mark of madian; they anele their cattell that starveth; and do many other feates els.

"Fyne floure is suche a merchandyse of theirs as far excedeth all other, and was first geven them by Pope Alexander the First, thinkinge Christes institution not sufficient, nor comly in using the common breade in that ministerie. For that ware hath brought them in their plentifull possessions, their lordshippes, fatte benifices, and prebendaries, with innumerable plesures els.

"Wheat have thei of their farmes, whereof they make pardon bread and cakes, to draw people to devocion towardes them.

"Cattell receive they, offered unto their idols by the idiots of the countries, for recover of sondrye diseases; besides that they have of their tithes.

"Shepe have they, sometime of their owne pastures, sometime of begginge, sometime of bequestes for the dead, to cry them out of their feareful purgatorye, when they be asleepe at midnight.

"Great horses have they, for mortuaries, for offices, for favers, giftes and rewardes, to be good lords unto them, that they may holde still their farmes, and to have saunder waspe their sonne and their heire a priest; or to admitte him unto a manerly benifice, that he may be called 'maister person,' and suche lyke.

"Charets have they also, or horse litters, of al manner of sorts, specially at Rome, with foote men runninge on both sides of them, to make roome for the holy fathers. Of whom some carye their owne precious bodyes, some theyr treasure, some the blessed sacramente, some holy reliques and ornamentes, some their whores, and some their bastardes. The bodyes of men must needes be judged to be at their pleasure, so long as Christen provinces be tributaries unto them, princes obediente, people subject, and their lawes at their commaundement to slea and to kyll. And to make this good, who hath not in England payd his Peter peny, sometime to acknowledge hymselfe a bondman of theirs, at the receit of his yerely howsell. Furthermore yet, besides their market muster of monkes, fryars, and priestes, they have certayne bondmen, of whom some they sell to the Venicians, some to the Genues, some to the Portingales, and some to the Turks, to row in their galleis. And laste of all, to make up their market, least any thing should escape theyr hands, these unmercifull bribers maketh marchaundise of the soules of men, to deprive Christe of His whole right, sending many unto hell, but not one unto heaven, (unlesse they maliciously murther them for the truths sake,) and all for mony. After many other sortes els, abuse they these good creatures of God, whom the Holy Ghost heere nameth. Much were it to shew here by the cronicles severally of what Pope they have recieved authorytie, power, and charge, to utter these wares to advauntage, and how they came firste by the old idolatrous."

Several of the most reputable MSS. Versions, and some of the Fathers, after cinnamon, add και αμωμον, and amomum. What this shrub was is not easy to say, though mentioned and partially described by Pliny and Dioscorides.— Some think it was a species of geranium; others, the rose of Jericho. It was an odoriferous plant, supposed to be a native of Assyria; and is thus mentioned by Virgil, Æclog. iv. v. 25.—

This is translated by some Spikenard; by others, Lady's Rose.

Thyine wood] The Thyne, or Thyin, is said to be a tree whose boughs, leaves, stalks, and fruit, resemble the cypress. It is mentioned by Homer, Odyss. lib. v. v. 60.; by Theophrastus, Hist. Plant. v. 5.; and by Pliny, Hist. Nat. lib.

Verse 14. And the fruits which thy soul lusted after] Και η οπωρα της επιθυμιας της ψυχης σου. As οπωρα signifies autumn, any and all kinds of autumnal fruits may be signified by the word in the above clause.

Dainty and goodly] Τα λιπαρα, delicacies for the table. Τα λαμπρα, what is splendid and costly in apparel.

Verse 15. Stand afar off] See ver. 10.

Verse 16. Clothed in fine linen, and purple, &c.] The verb περιβαλλεσθαι, which we here translate clothed, signifies often to abound, be enriched, laden with; and is so used by the best Greek writers: see many examples in Kypke. These articles are not to be considered here as personal ornaments, but as articles of trade or merchandise, in which this city trafficked.

Verse 17. Every shipmaster] Captains of vessels; some think pilots are meant, and this is most likely to be the meaning of the original word κυβερνητης. This description appears to be at least partly taken from Ezek. xxvii. 26—28.

And all the company in ships] Και πας επι των πλοιων ο ομιλος, the crowd or passengers aboard: but the best MSS. and Versions have, και πας ο επι τοπον πλεων, those who sail from place to place; or such as stop at particular places on the coast, without performing the whole voyage. This sufficiently marks the traffic on the coast of the Mediterranean sea. Some might debark (in sailing from Rome) at the island of Sicily; others at different ports in Greece; some at Corinth, others at Crete, or the various islands of the Ægean sea; some at Rhodes, Pamphylia, &c. &c. as in those times, in which the compass was unknown, every voyage was performed coastwise; always keeping, if possible, within sight of the land.

Verse 18. What city is like unto this great city!] Viz. in magnitude, power, and luxury.

Verse 19. They cast dust on their heads] They showed every sign of the sincerest grief. The lamentation over this great ruined city, from ver. 9 to 19. is exceedingly strong and well drawn. Here is no dissembled sorrow; all is real to the mourners, and affecting to the spectators.

Verse 20. Rejoice over her, thou heaven] This is grand and sublime: the fall of this bad city was cause of grief to bad men. But as this city was a persecutor of the godly, and an enemy to the works of God, angels, apostles, and prophets, are called to rejoice over her fall.

Verse 21. Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down] This action is finely and forcibly expressed by the original words:—Ουτως ορμηματι βληθησεται Βαβυλων η μεγαλη πολις. The millstone will in falling have not only an accelerated force from the law of gravitation; but that force will be greatly increased by the projectile force impressed upon it by the power of the destroying angel.

Shall be found no more at all.] In her government, consequence, or influence. This is true of ancient Babylon; we are not certain even of the place where it stood. It is also true of Jerusalem: her government, consequence, and influence, are gone. It is not true of Rome Pagan, nor, as yet, of Rome Papal: the latter still exists; and the former is most intimately blended with it; for in her religious service Rome Papal has retained her language; and many of her Heathen temples has she dedicated to saints, real or reputed; and incorporated many of her superstitions and absurdities in a professedly Christian service. It is true also that many idols are now restored under the names of Christian saints!

Verse 22. The voice of harpers, &c.] This seems to indicate not only a total destruction of influence, &c. but also of being. It seems as if this city was to be swallowed up by an earthquake, or burnt up by fire from heaven.

Verse 23. By thy sorceries] Political arts, state tricks, counterfeit miracles, and deceptive manœuvres of every kind. This may be spoken of many great cities of the world, which still continue to flourish!

Verse 24. In her was found the blood of prophets, &c.] She was the persecutor and murderer of prophets and of righteous men.

And of all that were slain upon the earth.] This refers to her counsels and influence, exciting other nations and people to persecute and destroy the real followers of God. There is no city to which all these things are yet applicable; therefore we may presume that the prophecy remains yet to be fulfilled.

Bishop Bale, who applies this, as before, to the Romish church, has, on ver. 22, given some information to the curious antiquary.

"But be certaine," says he, "and sure, thou myserable church, that thou shalt no longer enjoy the commodious pleasures of a free cittye.—The merry noyes of them that play upon harpes, lutes, and fidels; the sweet voice of musicians, that sing with virginals, vials, and chimes; the armony of them that pipe in recorders, flutes, and drums; and the shirle showt of trumpets, waits, and shawmes, shall no more be heard in thee, to the delight of men. Neyther shall the sweet organs containing the melodious noyse of all maner of instruments and byrdes, be plaied upon; nor the great bellcs be rong after that; nor yet the fresh discant, prick-song, counter-point, and faburden, be called for in thee; which art the very sinagog of Sathan. Thy lascivious armonye, and delectable musique, much provoking the weake hartes of men to meddle in thy abhominable whordom, by the wantonnes of idolatry in that kinde, shall perish with thee for ever. No cunning artificer, carver, paynter, nor gilder, embroderer, goldsmith, nor silk-worker; with such other like of what occupacion soever they be, or have bene to thy commodity, shall never more be found so agayne.

"Copes, cruettes, candelstickes, miters, crosses, sensers, crismatoris, corporasses, and chalices, which for thy whorishe holines might not somtime be touched, will than, for thy sake, be abhorred of all men. Never more shall be builded for marchants of thi livery and mark, palaces, temples, abbeys, collages, covents, chauntries, fair houses, and horcherds of plesure. The clapping noise of neyther wyndmil, horsemil, nor watermil, shal any more be heard, to the glutenous feeding of thy puffed up porklings, for the maintenaunce of thine idle observacions and ceremonies.—For thy mitred marchaunts were sumtimes princes of the earth, whan they reigned in their roialty. Thy shorn shavelinges were lordes over the multitude, whan they held their priestly authority over the soules and bodies of men. Yea, and with thy privy legardemain, with thy juggling castes, with thy craftes and inchauntmentes of thy subtile charmes were all nacions of the world deceyved."

This is very plain language; and thus, on all hands, a monstrous system of superstition and idolatry was attacked by our reformers; and with these unfurbished weapons, directed by the Spirit of the living God, Popery was driven from the throne, from the bench, from the universities, and from the churches, of this favoured kingdom. And by a proper application of Scripture, and by a universal diffusion of the word of God, it may be soon driven from the face of the Universe. And when the inventions of men are separated from that church, and it becomes truly regenerated; and of this it is highly capable, as among its monstrous errors and absurdities, it contains all the essential truths of God, it will become a praise and a glory in the earth. Protestants wish not its destruction, but its reformation.

Some there may be, who in their zeal for truth, would pull the whole edifice to pieces; but this is not God's method: He destroys what is evil, and saves what is good. It is reformation, not annihilation, that this church needs.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIX.

Verse 1. I heard a great voice of much people in heaven] The idolatrous city being destroyed, and the blood of the martyred saints being avenged, there is a universal joy among the redeemed of the Lord, which they commence with the word הללו יה Hallelu-Yah, praise ye Jah, or Jehovah; which the Septuagint, and St. John from them, put into Greek letters, thus, Αλληλουϊα, Allelou-ia: a form of praise which the Heathens appear to have borrowed from the Jews, as is evident from their pæans, or hymns in honour of Apollo, which began and ended with ελελευ ϊη, eleleu ie; a mere corruption of the Hebrew words. It is worthy of remark, that the Indians of North America have the same word in their religious worship, and use it in the same sense. "In their places of worship, or beloved square, they dance sometimes for a whole night, always in a bowing posture, and frequently singing halleluyah Ye ho vah; praise ye Yah, Ye ho vah:" probably the true pronunciation of the Hebrew יהוה, which we call Jehovah.—See Adair's History of the American Indians.

Salvation] He is the sole Author of deliverance from sin: the glory of this belongs to Him, the honour should be ascribed to Him, and His power is that alone by which it is effected.

Verse 2. For true and righteous] His judgments displayed in supporting His followers, and punishing His enemies, are true according to His predictions; and righteous, being all according to infinite justice and equity.

Verse 3. Her smoke rose up] There was, and shall be, a continual evidence of God's judgments executed on this great whore, or idolatrous city; nor shall it evermore be restored.

Verse 4. The four and twenty elders] The true church of the Lord Jesus, converted from among the Jews.—See chap. iv. 10. v. 14.

Verse 5. Praise our God, &c.] Let all, whether redeemed from among Jews or Gentiles, give glory to God.

Verse 6. The voice of a great multitude] This is the Catholic, or universal, church of God, gathered from among the Gentiles.

cient commentators on this Book, add ημων, our, after ὁ Θεος; and, according to this, the text reads emphatically thus, OUR Lord God, the Almighty, reigneth.—What consolation to every genuine Christian, that HIS Lord and God is the Almighty; and that this Almighty never trusts the reins of the government of the Universe out of His hands! What, therefore, has His Church to fear?

Verse 7. The marriage of the Lamb is come] The meaning of these figurative expressions appears to be this: after this overthrow of idolatry and superstition, and the discomfiture of Antichrist, there will be a more glorious state of Christianity than ever was before.

Verse 8. Arrayed in fine linen] A prediction that the church should become more pure in her doctrines, more pious in her experience, and more righteous in her conduct, than she had ever been from her formation.

The fine linen here spoken of, is not the righteousness of Christ imputed to believers, for it is here called the righteousness of the saints; that which the grace and Spirit of Christ has wrought in them.

Verse 9. Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper] This is an evident allusion to the marriage of the King's Son, Matt. xxii. 2, &c. where the incarnation of our Lord, and the calling of Jews and Gentiles, are particularly pointed out.—See the Notes there. Blessed are all they who hear the gospel, and are thus invited to lay hold on everlasting life.

Verse 10. I fell at his feet to worship him] Great as this angel was, St. John could not mistake him either for Jesus Christ, or for God the Father; nor was his prostration intended as an act of religious worship. It was merely an act of that sort of reverence which any Asiatic would pay to a superior. His mistake was the considering that he was under obligation to the angel, for the information which he had now received. This mistake the angel very properly corrects, showing him that it was from God alone this intelligence came; and that to Him alone, the praise was due.

I am thy fellow-servant] No higher in dignity than thyself; employed by the same God, on the same errand, and with the same testimony, and therefore not entitled to thy prostration: worship God; prostrate thyself to Him, and to Him give thanks.

The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.] As this is a reason given by the angel why he should not worship him, the meaning must be this: I, who have received this spirit of prophecy, am not superior to thee who hast received the testimony of Christ, to preach Him among the Gentiles; for the commission containing such a testimony is equal to the gift of the spirit of prophecy. Or, the spirit of prophecy is a general testimony concerning Jesus; for He is the scope and design of the whole Scripture; to him gave all the prophets witness: take Jesus, His grace, Spirit, and religion, out of the Bible, and it has neither scope, design, object, nor end.

Verse 11. A white horse] This is an exhibition of the triumph of Christ after the destruction of His enemies. The white horse is the emblem of this: and FAITHFUL and TRUE are characters of Christ.—See chap. iii. 14.

In righteousness doth he judge and make war] The wars which He wages are from no principle of ambition, lust of power, or extension of conquest and dominion: they are righteous in their principle and in their object. And this is perhaps what no earthly potentate could ever say.

Verse 12. His eyes were as a flame of fire] To denote the piercing and all-penetrating nature of His wisdom.

On his head were many crowns] To denote the multitude of His conquests, and the extent of His dominion.

what the rabbins call the shem hamphorash, or tetragrammaton, יהוה YHVH; or what we call Jehovah. This name the Jews never attempt to pronounce: when they meet with it in the Bible, they read אדני Adonai for it; but, to a man, they all declare that no man can pronounce it; and that the true pronunciation has been lost; at least since the Babylonish captivity; and that God alone knows its true interpretation and pronunciation. This, therefore, is the name which no man knew but he himself.

Verse 13. He was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood] To show that He was just come from recent slaughter. The description is taken from Isa. lxiii. 2, 3. where Judas Maccabeus, or some other conqueror, is described.

The Word of God.] Written in the Targum, and in other Jewish writings, מימרא דיי meimra dayeya, "the word of Jehovah;" by which they always mean a person, and not a word spoken.—See the Notes on John i. 1, &c.

Clothed in fine linen] All holy, pure, and righteous.

Verse 15. Out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword] See on chap. i. 16. This appears to mean the word of the gospel, by which His enemies are confounded, and His friends supported and comforted.

With a rod of iron] He shall execute the severest judgment on the opposers of His truth.

He treadeth the winepress] As the grapes are trodden to express the juice; so His enemies shall be bruised and beaten, so that their life's blood shall be poured out.

Verse 16. On his vesture and on his thigh a name written] Dr. Dodd has well observed on this passage, that "it appears to have been an ancient custom among several nations, to adorn the images of their deities, princes, victors at public games, and other eminent persons, with inscriptions, expressing either the character of the persons, their names, or some other circumstance which might contribute to their honour: and to that custom the description here given of Christ may possibly have some allusion.

"There are several such images yet extant, with an inscription written either on the garment, or on one of the thighs; or on that part of the garment which was over the thigh: and probably this is the meaning of the apostle. And as these inscriptions are placed on the upper garment, Grotius seems very justly to have explained the words επι το ιματιον, by his imperial robe, that His power in this victory might be conspicuous to all. But as a further confirmation of this sense of the passage it may not be improper here to describe briefly several remarkable figures of this sort, which are still extant." This description I shall give from my own examination.

1. HERODOTUS, Euterpe, lib. ii. p. 127. Edit. Gale, speaking of the actions of Sesostris, and of the images he set up in the countries which he conquered, has the following words—Εισι δε περι Ιωνιην δυο τυποι εν πετρησι εγκεκολαμμενοι τουτου του ανδρος κ. τ. λ. "Two images likewise of this man are seen in Ionia, on the way that leads from Ephesus to Phocea; and from Sardis to Smyrna." The figure is five palms in height: in his right hand he holds a dart, in his left a bow, armed after the manner of the Egyptians and Æthiopians. On a line drawn across the breast, from one shoulder to the other, are these words, written in Ægyptian hieroglyphics; Εγω τηνδε την χωρην ωμοισι τοισι εκτησαμην· I obtained this country by these shoulders; i. e. by my own power.

2. In the Etruria Regalis of Dempster, in the Appendix at the end of Vol. II. there is a beautiful female figure of brass, about twelve inches high, the hair gracefully plaited, and the head adorned with a diadem. She has a tunic, without sleeves, and over that a sort of pallium. On the outside of the right thigh, close to the tunic, and probably on it, in the original, is an inscription in Etruscan characters.—What these import I cannot say. Dempster has given a general explanation of the image, in the Appendix to the above Vol. p. 108. The plate itself is the lxxxiii. of the work.

3. There are two other images found in the same author, Vol. I. p. 91. tab. xxiv. the first is naked, with the exception of a short loose jupe, or petticoat, which goes round the loins, and over the left arm. On the left thigh of this image there is an inscription in Etruscan characters. The second has a similar jupe, but much longer, which extends to the calf of the leg, and is supported over the bended left arm. Over the right thigh, on this vesture, there is an Etruscan inscription in two lines.

4. MONTFAUCON, Antiquité Expliquée, Vol. III. part 2. p. 268. has introduced an account of two fine images which are represented Tab. CLVII. The first is a warrior, entirely naked, except a collar, one bracelet, and boots. On his left thigh, extending from the groin to a little below the knee, is an inscription in very ancient Etruscan characters, in two lines; but the import is unknown.

The second is a small figure of brass, about six inches long, with a loose tunic, which is suspended from the left shoulder, down to the calf of the legs. On this tunic, over the left thigh, is an inscription, (perhaps) in very ancient Latin characters, but in the Etruscan language, as the learned author conjectures. It is in one line, but what it means is equally unknown.

6. GRUTER, Vol. III. p. DCCCCLXXXIX. Sub. Tit. Affectus Servorum et Libertinorum inter se, et in suos, gives us the figure of a naked warrior, with his left hand on an axe, the end of whose helve rests on the ground; with the following inscription on the inside of his left thigh; longitudinally written, as in all other cases—

A. POBLICIUS. D. L. ANTIOC.
TI. BARBIUS. Q. P. L. TIBER.

7. The Rabbins say that "God gave to the Israelites a sword, on which the ineffable name יהוה Yehovah was inscribed: and as long as they held that sword, the angel of death had no power over them."—Shemoth Rabba, sect. 51. fol. 143. 2. Bammidbar rabba, sect. 12. fol. 214. 2.

In the latter tract, sect. 16. fol. 232. 3. and in Rab. Tancum. fol. 66. mention is made of the guardian angels of the Israelites, who were clothed with purple vestments, on which was inscribed שם המפורש shem hamphorash, the ineffable name.—See more in Schoettgen.

8. But what comes nearer to the point, in reference to the title given here to Christ, is what is related of Sesostris by DIODORUS Siculus, lib. i. c. 55. p. 166. Edit. Bipont. of whom he says, Having pushed his conquests as far as Thrace, he erected pillars on which were the following words in Egyptian hieroglyphics:—Τηνδε την χωραν οπλοις κατεσρεψατο τοις ἑαυτου Βασιλευς Βασιλεων, και Δεσποτης Δεσποτων Σεσωσις. This province, Sesoosis (Sesostris) KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS, conquered by his own arms. This inscription is conceived almost in the words of St. John. Now, the Greek historian did not borrow the words from the apostle; as he died in the reign of Augustus, about the time of our Lord's incarnation. This cannot be the same inscription mentioned above by Herodotus, the one being in Ionia, the other in Thrace; but as he erected several of those pillars or images, probably a nearly similar inscription was found on each.

9. This custom seems to have been common among the ancient Egyptians. Inscriptions are frequently found on the images of Isis, Osiris, Anubis, &c. at the feet, on the head, on the back, on the girdle, &c. &c. Eight of those ancient images in my own collection, abound with these inscriptions.

1. Osiris, four inches and a quarter high, standing on a throne all covered over with hieroglyphics, exquisitely engraved.

2. Anubis, six inches high, with a tiara, on the back of which is cut ΑΕΓΟΡΝΥΘ, in uncial Greek characters.

3. The Cercopithecus, seven inches long, sitting on a pedestal; and at his feet, in the same characters, CAΔEO.

4. An Isis, about eight inches high; on her back ΔΡΥΓΟ.

5. Ditto, seven inches, beautifully cut, standing, holding a serpent in her left hand, and at her feet ETAΠΥΓΙ.

6. Ditto, five inches and a quarter, round whose girdle is ΠΕΥCVΔΙ; but part of this inscription appears to be hidden under her arms, which are extended by her side.

7. Ditto, five inches high, hooded, with a loose stola, down the back of which are seven lines of Greek uncial characters, but nearly obliterated.

8. Ditto, four inches high, with a girdle going round the back immediately under the arms, the front of which is hidden under a sort of stomacher: on the part that appears are these characters CENAA. These may be all intended as a kind of abrasaxas, or tutelary deities; and I give this notice of them, and the inscriptions upon them, partly in illustration of the text; and partly to engage my learned and antiquarian Readers in attempts to decypher them. I would have the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great.

19 [a] And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army.

20 [b] And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and [c] them that worshipped his image. [d] These both were cast alive into a lake of fire [e] burning with brimstone.

given the Etruscan characters on the other images described above; but have no method of imitating them except by an engraving.

As these kinds of inscriptions on the thigh, the garments, and different parts of the body, were in use among different nations, to express character, conduct, qualities, and conquests, we may rest assured that to them St. John alludes, when he represents our Sovereign Lord with an inscription upon his vesture and upon his thigh; and had we not found it a custom among other nations, we should have been at a loss to account for its introduction and meaning here.

Verse 17. An angel standing in the sun] Exceedingly luminous; every part of him emitting rays of light. From this representation, Milton has taken his description of Uriel, the angel of the sun. Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 648.

> "Th' arch-angel Uriel, one of the seven
> Who, in God's presence, nearest to His throne
> Stand ready at command, and are His eyes
> That run through all the heavens, or down to th' earth
> Bear His swift errands over moist and dry,
> O'er sea and land."

All the fowls that fly] The carcasses of God's enemies shall be food for all the fowls of heaven. This is according to a Jewish tradition, Synopsis Sohar, p. 114. n. 25. "In the time when God shall execute vengeance for the people of Israel, He shall feed all the beasts of the earth for twelve months, with their flesh; and all the fowls for seven years." It is well known that both beasts and birds of prey are accustomed to frequent fields of battle, and live upon the slain.

Verse 18. That ye may eat the flesh of kings] There shall be an universal destruction; the kings, generals, captains, and all their host, shall be slain.

Verse 19. I saw the beast] See the Notes on chapters xii. xiii. and xvii.

Verse 20. And the beast was taken—and the false prophet] See the Notes on ch. xvii. 8., &c.

That worshipped his image] The beast has been represented as the Latin empire; the image of the beast, the Popes of Rome; and the false prophet, the Papal clergy.

Were cast alive into a lake of fire] Were discomfited when alive, in the zenith of their power; and destroyed with an utter destruction.

Verse 21. With the sword of him that sat upon the horse] He who sat on the white horse, is Christ; and His sword is His word, the unadulterated gospel.

CHAPTER XX.

An angel binds Satan a thousand years, and shuts him up in the bottomless pit, 1—3. They who were beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, who have part in the first resurrection, and shall reign with Christ a thousand years, 4—6. When the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, shall go forth and deceive the nations, and shall gather Gog and Magog from the four corners of the earth, 7, 8. These shall besiege the holy city; but fire shall come down from heaven and consume them, and they and the devil be cast into a lake of fire, 9, 10. The great white throne, and the dead small and great standing before God, and all judged according to their works, 11, 12. The sea, death, and hades, give up their dead, and are destroyed: and all, not found in the book of life, are cast into the lake of fire, 13—15.

NOTES ON CHAP. XX.

Verse 1. An angel come down from heaven] One of the executors of the Divine justice, who receives criminals, and keeps them in prison, and delivers them up only to be tried and executed.

The key of the prison, and the chain, show who he is; and as the chain was great, it shows that the culprit was impeached of no ordinary crimes.

Verse 2. The dragon] See the Notes on chap. xii. 9.

That old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan] He who is called the old serpent, is the DEVIL, the calumniator; and SATAN, the opposer. He who supposes that the term old serpent here, plainly proves that the creature that tempted our first parents was actually a snake, must enjoy his opinion: and those who can receive such a saying, why, let them receive it. Selah.

A thousand years.] In what this binding of Satan consists, who can tell? How many visions have been seen on this subject, both in ancient and modern times! This, and what is said ver. 3, 4, and 5. no doubt refers to a time in which the influence of Satan will be greatly restrained, and the true church of God enjoy great prosperity, which shall endure for a long time. But it is not likely that the number, a thousand years, is to be taken literally here, and year symbolically and figuratively in all the Book beside. The doctrine of the Millennium, or of the saints reigning on earth a thousand years, with Christ for their Head, has been illustrated and defended by many Christian writers, both among the ancients and moderns. Were I to give a collection of the conceits of the primitive Fathers on this subject, my Readers would have little reason to applaud my pains. It has long been the idle expectation of many persons that the Millennium, in their sense, was at hand: and its commencement has been expected in every century since the Christian era. It has been fixed for several different years, during the short period of my own life! I believed those predictions to be vain, and I have lived to see them such.

Yet, there is no doubt, that the earth is in a state of progressive moral improvement; and that the light of true religion is shining more copiously every where; and will shine more and more to the perfect day. But when the religion of Christ will be at its meridian of light and heat, we know not. In each believer, this may speedily take place: but probably no such time shall ever appear, in which evil shall be wholly banished from the earth; till after the day of judgment, when the earth having been burnt up, a new heaven and a new earth shall be produced out of the ruins of the old, by the mighty power of God: righteousness alone shall dwell in them. The phraseology of the apostle here, seems partly taken from the ancient prophets, and partly rabbinical; and it is from the Jewish use of those terms, that we are to look for their interpretation.

Verse 3. He should deceive the nations no more] Be unable to blind men with superstition and idolatry, as he had formerly done.

Verse 4. I saw thrones] Christianity established in the earth, the kings and governors being all Christians.

Reigned with Christ a thousand years.] I am satisfied that this period should not be taken literally. It may signify, that there shall be a long and undisturbed state of Christianity; and so universally shall the gospel spirit prevail, that it will appear as if Christ reigned upon earth: which will in effect be the case, because His Spirit shall rule in the hearts of men: and in this time the martyrs are represented as living again; their testimony being revived, and the truth for which they died, and which was confirmed by their blood, being now every where prevalent. As to the term thousand years, it is a mystic number among the Jews. Midrash Tillin, in Psa. xc. 15. Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, adds, "by Babylon, Greece, and the Romans: and in the days of the Messiah. How many are the days of the Messiah? Rab. Eliezer, the son of R. Jose of Galilee, said, The days of the Messiah are a thousand years."

Sanhedrin, fol. 92. 1. cited by the Aruch, under the word אירך, says, "There is a tradition in the house of Elias, that the righteous whom the holy blessed God shall raise from the dead, shall not return again to the dust, but for the space of a thousand years, in which the holy blessed God shall renew the world, they shall have wings like them, and [a] judgment was given unto them: and I saw [b] the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and [c] which had not worshipped the beast, [d] neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and [e] reigned with Christ a thousand years.

5 But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished, This is the first resurrection.

A. M. cir. 4100. A. D. cir. 96. Impp. Flavio Domitiano Cæs. Aug. et Nervâ.

6 Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such [f] the second death hath no power, but they shall be [g] priests of God and of Christ, [h] and shall reign with him a thousand years.

7 And when the thousand years are expired, [i] Satan shall be loosed out of his prison,

8 And shall go out [k] to deceive the nations

the wings of eagles, and shall fly above the waters." It appears, therefore, that this phraseology is purely rabbinical. Both the Greeks and Latins have the same form of speech in speaking on the state of the righteous and wicked, after death. There is something like this in the Republic of Plato, book x. p. 322. Edit. Bip. where, speaking of Erus, the son of Armenius, who came to life after having been dead twelve days; who described the states of departed souls; and asserted; "that some were obliged to make a long peregrination under the earth, before they arose to a state of happiness, ειναι δε την πορειαν χιλιετη, for it was a journey of a thousand years:—he adds, "that as the life of man is rated at a hundred years, those who have been wicked suffer in the other world a tenfold punishment; and, therefore, their punishment lasts a thousand years."—Ibid.

A similar doctrine prevailed among the Romans; whether they borrowed it from the Greeks, or from the rabbinical Jews, we cannot tell.

Thus Virgil, speaking of the punishment of the wicked in the infernal regions, says,

"Hos omnes, ubi MILLE rotam volvêre per annos, Lethæum ad fluvium Deus evocat agmine magno:
Scilicet immemores supera ut convexa revisant,
Rursus et incipiant in corpora velle reverti."
Æn. lib. vi. 748.

"But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their dreary punishment shall last,
Whole droves of spirits, by the driving god,
Are led to drink the deep Lethean flood
In large forgetful draughts, to sleep the cares
Of their past labours and their irksome years;
That, unremembring of its former pain,
The soul may clothe itself with flesh again."

How the apostle applies this general tradition, or in what sense he may use it, who can tell?

Verse 5. The rest of the dead lived not again] It is generally supposed from these passages, that all who have been martyred for the truth of God, shall be raised a thousand years before the other dead, and reign on earth with Christ during that time; after which, the dead in general shall be raised; but this also is very doubtful.

Verse 6. Blessed] Μακαριος, happy. And holy; he was holy; and, therefore, he suffered for the testimony of Jesus in the time when nothing but holiness was called to such a trial.

The first resurrection] Supposed to be that of the martyrs, mentioned above.

The second death] Punishment in the eternal world: such is the acceptation of the phrase among the ancient Jews.

Hath no power] Ουκ εχει εξουσιαν, hath no authority, no dominion over him. This is also a rabbinical mode of speech. In Erubin, fol. 19. 1. Chagiga, fol. 27. 1. "Res Lakish said, The fire of hell hath no power over an Israelite who sins: Rab. Elieser says, The fire of hell has no power over the disciples of the wise men."

Verse 7. Satan shall be loosed] How can this bear any kind of literal interpretation? Satan is bound a thousand years, and the earth is in peace; righteousness flourishes, and Jesus Christ alone reigns. This state of things may continue for ever, if the imprisonment of Satan be continued. Satan, however, is loosed at the end of the thousand years; and goes out and deceives the nations; and peace is banished from the face of the earth; and a most dreadful war takes place, &c. &c. These can be only symbolical representations; utterly incapable of the sense generally put upon them.

Verse 8. Gog and Magog] This seems to be almost literally taken from the Jerusalem Targum, and that of Jonathan ben Uzziel, on Numb. xi. 26. I shall give the words at length:—"And there were two men left in the camp, the name of the one was Eldad, the name of the other was Medad; and on them the spirit of prophecy rested. Eldad which are in the four quarters of the earth, [a] Gog and Magog, [b] to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.

9 [c] And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.

10 [d] And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, [e] where the beast and the false prophet are, and [f] shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

prophesied, and said, Behold, Moses the prophet, the scribe of Israel, shall be taken from this world; and Joshua, the son of Nun, captain of the host, shall succeed him. Medad prophesied, and said, Behold, quails shall arise out of the sea, and be a stumbling-block to Israel. Then they both prophesied together, and said, 'In the very end of time Gog and Magog and their army shall come up against Jerusalem; and they shall fall by the hand of the King Messiah; and for seven whole years shall the children of Israel light their fires with the wood of their warlike engines; and they shall not go to the wood nor cut down any tree.'" In the Targum of Jonathan ben Uzziel, on the same place, the same account is given; only the latter part, that is, the conjoint prophecy of Eldad and Medad, is given more circumstantially; thus—"And they both prophesied together, and said, 'Behold, a king shall come up from the land of Magog, in the last days, and shall gather the kings together, and leaders clothed with armour, and all people shall obey them; and they shall wage war in the land of Israel, against the children of the captivity: but the hour of lamentation has been long prepared for them, for they shall be slain by the flame of fire which shall proceed from under the throne of glory, and their dead carcasses shall fall on the mountains of the land of Israel; and all the wild beasts of the field, and the wild fowl of heaven, shall come and devour their carcasses; and afterward all the dead of Israel shall rise again to life, and shall enjoy the delights prepared for them from the beginning, and shall receive the reward of their works.'"

This account seems, most evidently, to have been copied by St. John; but how he intended it to be applied is a question too difficult to be solved by the skill of man: yet both the account in the Rabbins, and in St. John, is founded on Ezek. chap. xxxviii. and xxxix. The rabbinical writings are full of accounts concerning Gog and Magog; of which Wetstein has made a pretty large collection in his notes on this place. Under these names the enemies of God's truth are generally intended.

Verse 9. The beloved city] Primarily, Jerusalem; typically, the Christian church.

Verse 10. Was cast into the lake] Before, Satan was bound; that is, his power was curtailed and restrained: now, he is cast into the lake of fire; his power being totally taken away.

Verse 11. A great white throne] Refulgent with glorious majesty.

Him that sat on it] The indescribable Jehovah.

From whose face the earth and the heaven fled away] Even the brightness of His countenance dissolved the universe, and annihilated the laws by which it was governed. This is a very majestic figure, and finely expressed.

There was found no place for them.] The glorious Majesty of God filling all things; and being all in all.

Verse 12. The dead, small and great] All ranks, degrees, and conditions, of men. This description seems to refer to Dan. vii. 9, 10.

And the books were opened] See Dan. xii. 1. "Rab. Jehuda said, all the actions of men, whether good or bad, are written in a book; and of all they shall give account."—Sohar, Gen. fol. 79. col. 298. "How careful should men be to shun vice, and to act uprightly before the holy blessed God: seeing there are so many which go throughout the earth, see the works of men, testify of them, and write them in a book."—Ib. fol. 105. col. 417.

exception, give an account of themselves: and the books of the living and the dead are opened."—Sohar Chadash, fol. 19. 1.

The books mentioned here were the books of the living and the dead; or the book of life and the book of death: that is, the account of the good and evil actions of men; the former leading to life, the latter to death. St. John evidently alludes here to Dan. vii. 10. on which the rabbinical account of the books appears to be founded. The expressions are figurative in both.

According to their works.] And according to their faith also, for their works would be the proof whether their faith were true or false: but faith exclusively, could be no rule in such a procedure.

Verse 13. The sea gave up the dead] Those who had been drowned in it; and those millions slain in naval contests, who had no other grave.

And death] All who died by any kind of disease. Death is here personified; and represented as a keeper of defunct human beings: probably no more than earth or the grave is meant; as properly belonging to the empire of death.

And hell] Ἅιδης, Hades, the place of separate spirits. The sea and death have the bodies of all human beings; hades has their spirits. That they may be judged, punished, or rewarded, according to their works, their bodies and souls must be reunited; hades, therefore, gives up the spirits; and the sea and the earth give up the bodies.

Verse 14. And death and hell were cast into the lake] Death himself is now abolished; and the place for separate spirits no longer needful. All dead bodies and separated souls being rejoined, and no more separation of bodies and souls by death to take place; consequently, the existence of these things is no farther necessary.

This is the second death.] The first death consisted in the separation of the soul from the body, for a season; the second death, in the separation of body and soul from God for ever. The first death is that from which there may be a resurrection; the second death, is that from which there can be no recovery. By the first, the body is destroyed during time; by the second, body and soul are destroyed through eternity.

Verse 15. Written in the book of life] Only those who had continued faithful unto death, were taken to heaven. All whose names were not found in the public registers, who either were not citizens, or whose names had been erased from those registers because of crimes against the state, could claim none of those emoluments or privileges which belong to the citizens; so those, who either did not belong to the new and spiritual Jerusalem, or who had forfeited their rights and privileges by sin, and had died in that state, were cast into the lake of fire.

This is the way in which God, at the day of judgment, will proceed with sinners and apostates. Reader, see that thy name be written in the Sacred Register; and, if written in, see that it never be blotted out.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXI.

Verse 1. A new heaven and a new earth] See the Notes on 2 Pet. iii. 13. The ancient Jews believed that God would renew the heavens and the earth at the end of seven thousand years. The general supposition they founded on Isa. lxv. 17.

There was no more sea] The sea no more appeared than did the first heavens and earth. All was made new; and probably the new sea occupied a different position, and was differently distributed, from that of the old sea.

However, with respect to these subjects, as they stand in this most figurative book, I must express myself in the words of Calmet:—Vouloir dire quels seront ce nouveau Ciel, et cette nouvelle terre, quels seront leurs ornamens, et leur qualité, c'est à mon avis, la plus grande de toutes les presomptions. En general, ces manieres de parler marquent de très grands changemens dans l'univers. "To pretend to say what is meant by this new heaven and new earth, and what are their ornaments and qualities, is, in my opinion, the greatest of all presumptions. In general, these figures of speech point out great alterations in the Universe."

Verse 2. And I John] The writer of this book; whether the evangelist and apostle, or John the Ephesian presbyter, has been long doubted in the church.

New Jerusalem] See the Notes on Galat. iv. 24—27. This doubtless means the Christian church in a state of great prosperity and purity; but some think eternal blessedness is intended.

Coming down from God] It is a maxim of the ancient Jews that both the tabernacle, and the temple, and Jerusalem itself, came down from heaven. And in Midrash Hanâalem, Sohar, Gen. fol. 69. col. 271. Rab. Jeremias said, "The holy blessed God shall renew the world, and build Jerusalem, and shall cause it to descend from heaven." Their opinion is, that there are a spiritual temple, a spiritual tabernacle, and a spiritual Jerusalem; and that none of these can be destroyed, because they subsist in their spiritual representatives.—See Schoettgen.

Verse 3. The tabernacle of God is with men] God, in the most especial manner, dwells among His followers; diffusing His light and life every where.

Verse 4. There shall be no more death] Because there shall be a general resurrection. And this is the inference which St. Paul makes from his doctrine of a general resurrection, 1 Cor. xv. 26. where he says, the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. But death cannot be destroyed by there being simply no farther death; death can only be destroyed and annihilated by a general resurrection: if there be no general resurrection, it is most evident that death will still retain his empire. Therefore, the fact that there shall be no more death, assures the fact that there shall be a general resurrection: and this also is a proof that, after the resurrection, there shall be no more death.—See the whole of the Note on 1 Cor. xv. 27.

Verse 5. Behold, I make all things new] As the creation of the world, at the beginning, was the work of God alone; so this new creation.

These words are true and faithful.] Truth refers to the promise of these changes; faithfulness, to the fulfilment of these promises.

Verse 6. It is done] All is determined, and shall be fulfilled in due time. The great drama is finished, and what was intended is now completed; referring to the period alluded to by the angel.

one of the particular blessings of a future state. In Sanhedrin, Abboth R. Nathan, c. 31. it is said, "He will show them the excellency of the fountain of the future world, that they may accurately see and consider; and say, Wo to us! what good have we lost; and our race is cut off from the face of the earth."

Verse 7. Inherit all things] Here, he had no inheritance; there, he shall inherit the kingdom of heaven, and be with God and Christ; and have every possible degree of blessedness.

Verse 8. But the fearful] Δειλοις. Those who, for fear of losing life, or their property, either refused to receive the Christian religion, though convinced of its truth and importance; or, having received it, in times of persecution, fell away, not being willing to risk their lives.

The unbelieving] Those who resist against full evidence. And sinners, και αμαρτωλοις, is added here by about thirty excellent MSS. and is found in the Syriac, Arabic, some of the Slavonic; and in Andreas and Arethas. On this evidence Griesbach has admitted it into the text.

The abominable] Εβδελυγμενοις, those who are polluted with unnatural lusts.

And murderers] Πονευσι, those who take away the life of man, for any cause but the murder of another; and those who hate a brother in their heart.

And whoremongers] Πορνοις; adulterers, fornicators, whores, prostitutes, and rakes of every description.

Sorcerers] Φαρμακοις; persons who, by drugs, philtres, fumigations, &c. pretend to produce supernatural effects; chiefly by spiritual agency.

Idolaters] Ειδωλολατραις; those who offer any kind of worship or religious reverence to any thing but God—All image worshippers are idolaters in every sense of the word.

And all liars] Και πασι τοις ψευδεσι; every one who speaks contrary to the truth, when he knows the truth; and even he who speaks the truth with the intention to deceive: i. e. to persuade a person that a thing is different from what it really is, by telling only a part of the truth; or suppressing some circumstance which would have led the hearer to a different, and to the true conclusion. All these shall have their portion, το μερος, their share, what belongs to them, their right, in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone. This is the second death, from which there is no recovery.

Verse 10. To a great and high mountain] That being above this city, he might see every street and lane of it.

The holy Jerusalem] See on ver. 2.

Verse 11. Having the glory of God] Instead of the sun and moon, it has the splendour of God to enlighten it.

Unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal.] Among precious stones, there are some even of the same species more valuable than others; for their value is in proportion to their being free from flaws, and of a good water; i. e. a uniform and brilliant transparency. A crystal is perfectly clear, the oriental jasper is a beautiful sea green. The stone that is here described is represented as a perfectly transparent jasper, being as unclouded as the brightest crystal, and consequently the most precious of its species. Nothing can be finer than this description: the light of this city is ever intense, equal, and splendid; but it is tinged with this green hue, in order to make it agreeable to the sight. Nothing is so friendly to the eye as green; all other colours fatigue, and, if very intense, injure the eye. This is the colour of the earth on which the eye of man is to be constantly fixed. To this colour the structure of the eye is adapted: and the general appearance of the earth is adapted to this structure.

Verse 12. Had a wall great and high] An almighty defence.

Twelve gates] A gate for every tribe of Israel: in the vicinity of which gate that tribe dwelt; so that in coming in and going out they did not mix with each other. This description of the city is partly taken from Ezek. xlviii. 30—35.

In Synopsis Sohar, p. 115. n. 27. it is said, "In the palace of the world to come there are twelve gates, each of which is inscribed with one of the twelve tribes, as that of Reuben, of Simeon, &c.; he, therefore, who is of the tribe of Reuben is received into none of the twelve gates but his own; and so of the rest."

Verse 13. On the east three gates] The city is here represented as standing to the four cardinal points of heaven, and presenting one side to each of these points.

Verse 14. The wall—had twelve foundations] Probably twelve stones, one of which served for a foundation, or threshold, to each gate; and on these were inscribed the names of the twelve apostles, to intimate that it was by the doctrine of the apostles, that souls enter into the church, and thence into the New Jerusalem.

Verse 15. Had a golden reed] Several excellent MSS. add μετρον, a measure; he had a measuring-rod made of gold. This account of measuring the city seems to be copied, with variations, from Ezek. xl. 3, &c.

Verse 16. The city lieth foursquare] Each side was equal; consequently, the length and breadth were equal: and its height is here said to be equal to its length. It is hard to say how this should be understood. It cannot mean the height of the buildings, nor of the walls, for neither houses nor walls could be twelve thousand furlongs in height: some think this means the distance from the plain country to the place where the city stood. But what need is there of attempting to determine such measures in such a visionary representation? The quadrangular form intimates its perfection and stability, for the square figure was a figure of perfection among the Greeks: ανηρ τετραγωνος, the square or cubical man, was, with them, a man of unsullied integrity, perfect in all things.

Verse 17. The wall—an hundred and forty and four cubits] This is twelve, the number of the apostles, multiplied by itself; for twelve times twelve make one hundred and forty-four.

The measure of a man, that is, of the angel] The cubit, so called from cubitus, the elbow, is the measure from the tip of the elbow to the tip of the middle finger; and is generally reckoned at one foot and a half, or eighteen inches; though it appears, from some measurements at the pyramids of Egypt, that the cubit was, at least in some cases, twenty-one inches.

By the cubit of a man, we may here understand the ordinary cubit; and that this was the angel's cubit who appeared in the form of a man. Or, suppose we understand the height of the man as being here intended; and that this was the length of the measuring-rod. Now, allowing this height and rod to be six feet, and that this was intended to have some kind of symbolical reference to the twelve tribes, mentioned ver. 12. represented by the twelve gates; and to the twelve apostles, represented by the twelve thresholds, or foundations: then twenty-four, the number of the tribes and apostles, multiplied by six, make precisely the number one hundred and forty-four.

Verse 18. The building of the wall of it was of jasper] The oriental jasper was exceedingly hard, and almost indestructible. Pillars made of this stone have lasted some thousands of years, and appear to have suffered scarcely any thing from the tooth of time.

that the walls were made of some beautifully bright yellow stone, very highly polished? This description has been most injudiciously applied to heaven; and in some public discourses, for the comfort and edification of the pious, we hear of heaven with its golden walls, golden pavements, gates of pearl, &c. &c. not considering that nothing of this description was ever intended to be literally understood; and that gold and jewels can have no place in the spiritual and eternal world. But do not such descriptions as these tend to keep up a fondness for gold and ornaments? In symbols they are proper; but construed into realities, they are very improper.

The ancient Jews teach, that "when Jerusalem and the temple shall be built, they will be all of precious stones, and pearls, and sapphire; and with every species of jewels."—Sephir Rasid hagadol, fol. 24. 1.

The same authors divide Paradise into seven parts, or houses; the third they describe thus—"The third house is built of gold and pure silver, and all kinds of jewels and pearls. It is very spacious; and in it all kinds of the good things, either in heaven or earth, are to be found. All kinds of precious things, perfumes and spiritual virtues, are there planted. In the midst of it is the tree of life, the height of which is five hundred years; (i. e.) it is equal in height to the journey which a man might perform in five hundred years,) and under it dwell Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, the twelve patriarchs, and all that came out of Egypt, and died in the wilderness. Over these Moses and Aaron preside, and teach them the law," &c.—Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 13. 4. In the same tract, fol. 182. 1. we find these words—"Know that we have a tradition, that when the Messiah, with the collected captivity, shall come to the land of Israel, in that day the dead in Israel shall rise again; and in that day the fiery walls of the city of Jerusalem shall descend from heaven: and in that day the temple shall be builded of jewels and pearls."

Verse 19. The foundations of the wall] Does not this mean the foundations, or thresholds, of the gates? The gates represented the twelve tribes, ver. 12. and these foundations, or thresholds, the twelve apostles, ver. 14. There was no entrance into the city but through those gates; and none through the gates but over these thresholds. The whole of the Mosaic dispensation was the preparation of the gospel system; without it the gospel would have no original; without the gospel, it would have no reference, nor proper object. Every part of the gospel necessarily supposes the law and the prophets. They are the gates, it is the threshold; without the gospel, no person could enter through those gates. The doctrine of Christ crucified, preached by the apostles, gives a solid foundation to stand on; and we have an entrance into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, Heb. x. 19, &c. And in reference to this, we are said to be built on the FOUNDATION of the APOSTLES and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, Eph. ii. 20.

The first foundation was jasper] A stone very hard, some species of which are of a sea-green colour.

The second, a sapphire] This is a stone of a fine blue colour, next in hardness to the diamond.

The third, a chalcedony] A genus of the semi-pellucid gems; of which there are four species:

1. A bluish white; this is the most common sort.
2. The dull milky veined; this is of little worth.
3. The brownish black, the least beautiful of all.
4. The yellow and red, the most beautiful, as it is the most valuable, of all. Hitherto this has been found only in the East Indies.

The fourth, an emerald] This is of a bright green colour, without any mixture: and is one of the most beautiful of all the gems. The true oriental emerald is very scarce, and said to be found only in the kingdom of Cambay.

Verse 20. The fifth, sardonyx] The onyx is an accidental variety of the agate kind: it is of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red. When on one or both sides the white there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonyx.

The seventh, chrysolite] The gold stone. It is of a dusky green, with a cast of yellow. It is a species of the topaz.

The eighth, beryl] This is a pellucid gem of a bluish green colour.

The ninth, a topaz] A pale dead green, with a mixture of yellow. It is considered by the mineralogists, as a variety of the sapphire.

21 And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl: [a] and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

22 [b] And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.

23 [c] And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

The tenth, a chrysoprasus] A variety of the chrysolite, called by some the yellowish green and cloudy topaz. It differs only from the chrysolite, in having a bluish hue.

The eleventh, a jacinth] A precious stone of a dead red colour, with a mixture of yellow.

The twelfth, an amethyst] A gem generally of a purple or violet colour, composed of a strong blue and deep red.

These stones are nearly the same with those on the breastplate of the high priest, Exod. xxviii. 17, &c. and probably were intended to express the meaning of the Hebrew words there used.—See the Notes on the above passages, where these gems are particularly explained.

Verse 21. The twelve gates were twelve pearls] This must be merely figurative, for it is out of all the order of nature to produce a pearl large enough to make a gate to such an immense city. But St. John may refer to some relations of this nature among his countrymen, who talk much of most prodigious pearls. I shall give an example:—"When Rabbi Juchanan (John) once taught that God would provide jewels and pearls, thirty cubits every way; ten of which should exceed in height twenty cubits, and should place them in the gates of Jerusalem, according to what is said, Isa. liv. 12. I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, one of his disciples ridiculed him, saying, Where can such be found, since at present there is none so large as a pigeon's egg? Afterward, being at sea in a ship, he saw the ministering angels cutting gems and pearls: and he asked them for what purpose they were preparing those? They answered, To place them in the gates of Jerusalem. On his return he found Rabbi Juchanan teaching as usual; to whom he said, Explain, master, what I have seen! He answered, Thou knave, unless thou hadst seen, thou wouldest not have believed: wilt thou not receive the saying of the wise men? At that moment he fixed his eyes upon him, and he was reduced into a heap of bones." Bava bathra, fol. 77. 1. and Sanhedrin, fol. 100. 1. p. 393. Edit. Cocceii.—See Schoettgen.

Verse 22. I saw no temple] There was no need of a temple, where God and the Lamb were manifestly present.

Verse 23. No need of the sun] This is also one of the traditions of the ancient Jews; that in the world to come, the Israelites shall have no need of the sun by day, nor the moon by night. Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 7. 3. God's light shines in this city; and in the Lamb that light is concentrated; and from Him every where diffused.

Verse 24. The nations of them which are saved] This is an allusion to the promise that the Gentiles should bring their riches, glory, and excellence, to the temple at Jerusalem, after it should be rebuilt.—See ver. 26.

Verse 25. The gates of it shall not be shut at all] The Christian church shall ever stand open to receive sinners of all sorts, degrees, and nations.

There shall be no night there.] No more idolatry, no intellectual darkness: the Scriptures shall be every where read; the pure word every where preached; and the Spirit of God shall shine and work in every heart.

Verse 26. The glory and honour of the nations into it] Still alluding to the declarations of the prophets, (see the passages in the margin, ver. 24, &c.) that the Gentiles would be led to contribute to the riches and glory of the temple, by their gifts, &c.

Verse 27. There shall in nowise enter into it any thing that defileth] See Isa. xxxv. 8. lii. 1. Neither an impure person, he who turns the grace of God into lasciviousness; nor a liar, he that holds and propagates false doctrines.

But they which are written] The acknowledged persevering members of the true church of Christ, shall enter into heaven: and only those who are saved from their sins, shall have a place in the church militant.

All Christians are bound by their baptism to renounce the devil and all his works, the pomps and vanities of this wicked world, and all the sinful lusts of the flesh; to keep God's holy word and commandments, and to walk in the same all the days of their life. This is the generation of them that seek thy face, O God of Jacob. Reader, art thou of this number? Or, art thou expecting an eternal glory, while living in sin? If so, thou wilt be fearfully disappointed. Presuming on the mercy of God, is as ruinous as despairing of His grace. Where God gives power both to will and to do, the individual should work out his salvation with fear and trembling.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXII.

Verse 1. Pure river of water of life] This is evidently a reference to the garden of Paradise, and the river by which it was watered; and there is also a reference to the account, Ezek. xlvii. 7—12. Water of life, as we have seen before, generally signifies spring, or running water; here, it may signify incessant communications of happiness proceeding from God.

Verse 2. In the midst of the street of it] That is, of the city which was described in the preceding chapter.

The tree of life] An allusion to Gen. ii. 9. As this tree of life is stated to be in the streets of the city, and on each side of the river; tree must here be an enallage of the singular for the plural number, trees of life, or trees which yielded fruit, by which life was preserved. The account in Ezekiel is this: And by the river, upon the banks thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade—it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months—and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine. Ch. xlvii. 12.

Twelve manner of fruits] Καρπους δωδεκα, twelve fruits; that is, fruit twelve times in the year, as is immediately explained, yielded her fruit every month. As this was a great and spacious city, one fountain was not sufficient to provide water for it, therefore a river is mentioned; a great river, by which it was sufficiently watered. Some think that by this tree of life the gospel is indicated: the twelve fruits are the twelve apostles; and the leaves are gospel doctrines by which the nations, the Gentiles, are healed of the disease of sin. But this seems to be a fanciful interpretation.

Verse 3. No more curse] Instead of καταναθεμα, curse, the best MSS. Versions, &c. read καταθεμα, cursed person.

5 [c] And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for [d] the Lord God giveth them light: [e] and they shall reign for ever and ever.

6 And he said unto me, [f] These sayings are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy prophets [g] sent his angel to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done.

8 And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, [k] I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things.

9 Then saith he unto me, [l] See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God.

As there shall be no more sinning against God, so there shall be no more curse of God upon the people; for they shall be all His servants, and serve Him. Our first parents came under the curse by sinning against their Maker in Paradise: these shall never apostatize; therefore, neither they, nor the earth, shall be cursed.

Verse 4. See his face] Enjoy what is called the beatific vision: and they shall exhibit the fullest evidence, that they belong entirely to Him; for His name shall be written on their foreheads.

Verse 5. There shall be no night there] See the 23d and 25th verses of the preceding chapter.

Verse 6. These sayings are faithful and true] See the preceding chapter, ver. 5. From this verse to the end of the chapter, is reckoned the epilogue of this Book. 1. The angel affirms the truth of all that had been spoken, ver. 6—11. 2. Jesus Christ confirms what has been affirmed, and pledges Himself for the fulfilment of all the prophecies contained in it, ver. 12—17. 3. John cautions his readers against adding or diminishing, and concludes with the apostolical blessing, ver. 18—21.

The things which must shortly be done.] There are many sayings in this Book which, if taken literally, would intimate that the prophecies delivered in the whole of the Apocalypse, were to be fulfilled in a short time after their delivery to John: and this is a strong support of the scheme of Wetstein, and those who maintain that the prophecies of this Book all referred to those times in which the apostle lived; and to the disturbances which then took place not only among the Jews, but in the Roman empire. What they all mean, and when and how they are to be fulfilled, God in heaven alone knows!

Verse 8. I fell down to worship] I prostrated myself before him as before a superior being, to express my gratitude, and give him thanks for the communications he had made.—See on ch. xix. 10.

Verse 10. Seal not the sayings] Do not lay them up for future generations; they concern the present times; they must shortly come to pass—for the time is at hand.—See above, ver. 6. What concerned the Jews, was certainly at hand.

Verse 11. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still] The time of fulfilment will come so suddenly, that there will be but little space for repentance and amendment. What is done, must be done instantly; and let him that is holy persevere, and hold fast what he has received.

Verse 12. Behold, I come quickly] I come to establish My cause, comfort and support My followers, and punish the wicked.

Verse 13. I am Alpha and Omega] See on ch. i. 8, 18.

Verse 14. Blessed are they that do his commandments] They are happy who are obedient.

That they may have right to the tree of life] The original is much more expressive, ινα εσται η εξουσια αυτων επι το ξυλον της ζωης, that they may have authority over the tree of life; an authority founded on right; this right founded on obedience to the commandments of God; and that obedience produced by the grace of God working in them. Without grace, no obedience; without obedience, no authority to the tree of life; without authority, no right; without right, no enjoyment; God's grace, through Christ, produces the good; and then rewards it as if all had been our own.

And sorcerers] See the Note on ch. xxi. 8.

Verse 16. I Jesus] The Maker, the Redeemer, and Judge, of all men.

Have sent mine angel] An especial messenger from heaven.

I am the root and the offspring of David] Christ is the root of David, as to His Divine nature; for, from that, all the human race sprang; for He is the Creator of all things, and without him was nothing made which is made. And He is the offspring of David, as to His human nature; for that He took of the stock of David, becoming thereby Heir to the Jewish throne; and the only Heir which then existed: and it is remarkable, that the whole regal family terminated in Christ; and as HE liveth for ever, He is the alone true David and everlasting King.

The bright and morning star.] I am splendour and glory to My kingdom; as the morning star ushers in the sun, so shall I usher in the unclouded and eternal glories of the everlasting kingdom.

Verse 17. The Spirit and the bride] All the prophets, and all the apostles; the church of God under the Old Testament, and the church of Christ under the New.

Say, Come.] Invite men to Jesus, that by Him they may be saved, and prepared for this kingdom.

Let him that heareth] Let all who are privileged with reading and hearing the word of God, join in the general invitation to sinners.

Him that is athirst] He who feels his need of salvation, and is longing to drink of the living Fountain.

And whosoever will] No soul is excluded: Jesus died for every man; every man may be saved; therefore, he who wills, who wishes for salvation, let him come and take the water of life freely, without money or price!

Verse 18. If any man shall add] Shall give any other meaning to these prophecies, or any other application of them than God intends; he, though not originally intended, shall have the plagues threatened in this Book for his portion.

Verse 19. If any man shall take away] If any man shall lessen this meaning, curtail the sense, explain away the spirit and design of these prophecies, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, &c. Thus Jesus Christ warns all those who consider this book, to beware of indulging their own conjectures concerning it. I confess that this warning has its own powerful influence upon my mind, and has prevented me from indulging my own conjectures concerning its meaning; or of adopting the conjectures of others. These visions and threatenings are too delicate and awful a subject to trifle with; or even to treat in the most solemn manner, where the meaning is obscure. I must leave these things to time and event, the surest interpreters. No jot or tittle of Christ's word shall fall to the ground; all shall have its fulfilment in due time.

This is termed a revelation, but it is a revelation of symbols; an exhibition of enigmas, to which no particular solution is given; and to which God alone can give the solution.

Verse 20. Surely I come quickly] This may be truly said to every person, in every age: Jesus, the Judge, is at the door!

Even so, come, Lord Jesus.] The wish and desire of the suffering church, and of all the followers of God, who are longing for the coming of His kingdom.

Verse 21. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ] May the favour and powerful influence of Jesus Christ be with you all; you, of the seven churches, and the whole church of Christ, in every part of the earth, and through all the periods of time.

Instead of παντων υμων, you all, the most excellent MSS. and Versions have παντων των αγιων, with all the saints. This reading Griesbach has received into the text as indisputably genuine.

Amen.] So be it! and so it shall be for ever and ever.—The opinion of Dr. Priestley concerning the authenticity of this Book, and the manner in which it is written, should not be withheld from either the learned or pious Reader. "I think it impossible for any intelligent and candid person to peruse this Book without being struck, in the most forcible manner, with the peculiar dignity and sublimity of its composition, superior to that of any other writing whatever; so as to be convinced that, considering the age in which it appeared, none but a person divinely inspired could have written it. These prophecies are also written in such a manner as to satisfy us, that the events announced to us were really foreseen; being described in such a manner as no person writing without that knowledge, could have done. This requires such a mixture of clearness and obscurity, as has never yet been imitated by any forgers of prophecy whatever. Forgeries, written of course after the events, have always been too plain. It is only in the Scriptures, and especially in the Book of Daniel, and this of the Revelation, that we find this happy mixture of clearness and obscurity in the accounts of future events."—Notes on Revelation.

The Codex Alexandrinus has simply—the Revelation of John.

The Syriac—doubles the Amen.

The Æthiopic—Here is ended the vision of John; the Apocalypse, Amen: this is, as one might say, the vision which he saw in his life; and it was written by the blessed John, the evangelist of God.

Vulgate and Coptic—nothing.

Ancient Arabic—By the assistance of our Lord Jesus Christ, the vision of John, the apostle and evangelist, the beloved of the Lord, is finished: this is the apocalypse which the Lord revealed to him for the service of men. To Him be glory for ever and ever!

Having now brought my short Notes on this very obscure Book to a conclusion, it may be expected that, although I do not adopt any of the theories which have been delivered concerning it, yet I should give the most plausible scheme of the ancients or moderns which has come to my knowledge.—This I would gladly do, if I had any scheme to which I could give a decided preference. However, as I have given, in the Preface, the scheme of Professor Wetstein, it is right that I should, at the conclusion, give the scheme of Mr. Lowman, which is nearly the same with that of Bishop Newton, and which, as far as I can learn, is considered by the most rational divines as being the most consistent and probable.

The scheme of the learned and pious Bengel may be found in the late Rev. John Wesley's Notes on this Book; that of Mr. Lowman, which now follows, may be found at the end of Dr. Dodd's Notes.

Among other objections to this, and all such schemes, I have this which to me appears of vital consequence: its dates are too late. I think the book was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, and not in 95 or 96, the date which I follow in the margin: which date I give, not as my own opinion, but the opinion of others.

SCHEME and ORDER of the PROPHECIES in the APOCALYPSE.

INTRODUCTION.	CHAP. I.	A. D.
A prophetic vision in the Isle of Patmos, representing Christ; His care of the churches; promising a revelation; with cautions and exhortations suitable to the then state of the church, and to its future state in after ages; to encourage patience and constancy in the faith.	v. 1—19	95
FIRST PART of the Apocalypse, relating to the things that are, or to the then state of the church.
Seven Epistles to the seven churches of Asia Minor; describing their present state.	II.
SECOND PART of the Apocalypse relating to the things which shall be hereafter; or to the state of the church in the ages to come after the time of the vision: with cautions and exhortations suitable to it.	IV.
Scene of the visions; the throne of God; the consistory above and heavenly church, representing God's power, majesty, authority, providence, and sure event of all His purposes.
A sealed book, containing a revelation of the state of the church in after ages, given to the Lamb to open, or to Jesus Christ to reveal for the good of the church, by St. John.
Chorus of angels and saints, or the whole heavenly church, sings a psalm of praise to the Lamb.	ver. 8.
The revelation begins by opening the sealed book, which describes the future state of the church in seven successive periods.	VI.
SEVEN PERIODS.
First Period, showing the state of the church under the heathen Roman emperors, from about the year 95 to about the year 323; the seals of the book opened in order.		95 323

Seven Seals.	CHAP.	A D.
1. First seal represents a white horse; the rider with a crown, going forth to conquer, signifying the kingdom of Christ, or Christian religion prevailing against the opposition of Jews and Heathens.
2. Second seal represents a red horse; power given to the rider to take peace from the earth, signifying the first memorable judgment on the persecutors of Christianity in the destruction of the Jews under Trajan and Hadrian.		100 138
3. Third seal represents a black horse; the rider with a balance, to measure corn, signifying great scarcity of provisions, near to famine, in the time of the Antonines.		138 139
4. Fourth seal represents a pale horse; the name of the rider Death; signifying great mortality and pestilence, wherewith the empire was punished in the reigns of Maximin and Valerian.		193 270
5. Fifth seal represents the souls of the martyrs under the altar; their reward and deliverance in a short time: signifying the severe persecution in the reign of Dioclesian; with an encouragement to constancy, suitable to such times of difficulty.		270 304
6. Sixth seal represents earthquakes, sun darkened, stars falling from heaven, signifying great commotions in the empire, from Maximin to Constantine the Great, who put a period to the persecution of Rome Heathen.		304 323
Interval between the first and second periods; representing an angel sealing 144,000 with the seal of the living God; signifying great numbers forsaking the idolatrous worship of the Heathen Roman empire, and embracing the profession of Christianity.	VII.
Chorus of the heavenly church bless-	ver. 9.

ing God for His salvation. One of the elders shows unto St. John the happiness of those who were faithful and constant to true religion in the great trial of so grievous persecution.
Period II.
Second Period reveals the state of the church and providence in times following the reign of Constantine, during the invasion of the empire by the northern nations; the rise and first progress of the Mohammedan imposture, till the stop put to it in the western empire, which reaches from about the year 337 to 750. Seven angels receive seven trumpets to sound.	VIII.	337 370
Seven Trumpets.
1. First trumpet represents hail and fire mingled with blood cast on the earth; signifying great storms of war to fall on the empire, and the blood that was shed in the reigns of the Constantine family, and their successors, till things were settled under Theodosius.		337 379
2. Second trumpet represents a mountain burning with fire, cast into the sea, whereby it became blood; signifying the invasion of Italy by the northern nations, and taking the city of Rome by Alaric.		379 412
3. Third trumpet represents a burning star falling upon the rivers, which became bitter; signifying the ravages in Italy, putting an end to the Roman empire, and founding a kingdom of Goths in Italy itself.		412 493
4. Fourth trumpet represents a part of the sun and moon darkened; signifying the wars in Italy between Justinian's generals, and the Goths, whereby the exarchate of Ravenna was erected, and all remaining power and authority of Rome quite suppressed.		493 568
5. Fifth trumpet represents the bottomless pit opened, and locusts coming out of it; signifying the rise of the Mohammedan religion and empire, and the great progress of both; till a stop was put to them by a contention for the succession.	IX.	568 675
6. Sixth trumpet represents four angels loosed which were bound in the river Euphrates; signifying the reunion of the divided Saracen power, the invasion of Europe by them, and threatening the conquest of it, till defeated by Charles Martel.		675 750
Period III.
Third Period of the vials reveals the state of the church and providence in the times of the last head of Roman government, represented by the beast, for 1260 years, to its final overthrow from about the year 756, to about the year 2016. An angel, or nuncius, brings a little book, the remainder of the sealed book opened by the Lamb; and gives it to St. John to eat; signifying a further revelation of what was to follow in order of time, to the end of the world.	X.	756 2016
Three general descriptions of this period:—
1. First general description represents the temple measured; part given to the Gentiles; two witnesses prophesy in sackcloth 1260 days; signifying the corrupt state of the church, and the constancy of some faithful witnesses to the truth, though under severe persecutions, during this whole period.	XI.
2. Second general description represents a woman forced to fly into the wilderness for safety, and protected there 1260 days; signifying the persecution and preservation of the church during the same period.	XII.
3. Third general description represents a monstrous wild beast rising out of the sea, with seven heads, ten horns, as many crowns, and titles of blasphemy, who was to continue forty and two months; signifying that new	XIII.

	Chap.	A. D.
Roman power, which should use its authority to promote idolatrous worship, and persecute all who would not submit to it, and should be supported by another power like unto its own form and constitution, during the same period.
Chorus of the heavenly church celebrates, in a hymn the happiness of those who remain faithful and constant.	XIV.
A nuncius, or angel, comes down from heaven to declare the certain and severe punishment of the enemies of truth and pure religion, in this period.
Seven angels receive seven cups, full of the wrath of God; signifying that the enemies of truth and pure religion in this period shall be severely punished in the course of it; and that they shall be utterly destroyed in the end.	XV.
The oracle gives orders to the seven angels to pour out their vials, or cups.	XVI.
Seven Vials.
First vial poured on the earth; a grievous sore upon the worshippers of the beast, signifying the great commotions throughout the whole empire, under the family of Charles the Great, by which that family becomes extinct, and by which both the empire and crown of France are transferred to other families.		830 988
2. Second vial poured on the sea: it becomes as the blood of a dead man; signifying the great bloodshed of the holy war, to recover Jerusalem from the Saracens.		1040 1190
3. Third vial poured on the rivers and fountains: they become blood; signifying the bloody civil wars between the Guelphs and the Gibbelines, the Papal and imperial factions, when the Popes were driven out of Italy into France.		1200 1371
4. Fourth vial poured on the sun, which has power given it to scorch men; signifying the long wars in Italy, Germany, France, and Spain, occasioned by a long schism in the Papacy. Turks take Constantinople, and put an end to the eastern empire. Pestilential diseases occasioned by intemperate heat.		1378 1530
5. Fifth vial poured on the seat of the beast, or his throne; signifying the Reformation, and the confirmation of it by the principal states of Europe, notwithstanding all opposition from the Pope, and in opposition to the Papal authority.		1560 1650
6. Sixth vial, poured on the river Euphrates, makes way for the kings of the East. This seems in the order of the prophecies to be yet future; but may likely mean some invasion of the Pope's dominions from its eastern boundary, or the Adriatic.		1670 1850
7. Seventh vial poured on the air, the seat of Satan's empire; describes the utter ruin of this persecuting idolatrous Roman government, or mystical Babylon, at the end of this period.		1850 2016
Mentions an angel interpreter, who fully explains the character of this idolatrous persecuting power, which should corrupt the church, and persecute the faithful, during this period.	XVII.
Another angel sent from heaven to confirm the utter and lasting destruction of this mystical Babylon, as a punishment for her idolatrous corruptions and persecutions.	XVIII.
Chorus of the heavenly church sings the praise of God, for His righteous judgments.	XIX.
A vision of Christ leading an army out of heaven, strongly represents the certain accomplishment of this prophecy.
Period IV.
An angel sent from heaven to shut up Satan in the bottomless pit, as in a secure prison, for one thousand years, during which time there will be a very happy state of the church, in purity, peace, and prosperity.	XX.

	Chap.	A. D.
Period V.
After the thousand years of the church's prosperity shall be expired, Satan will be loosed again for a little season; a new attempt will be made to revive the corruptions of the church and a spirit of persecution, which shall end in the final destruction of Satan's power, and of all the enemies of pure and true religion.	XX. 7.
Period VI.
The general resurrection and final judgment; the everlasting destruction of the wicked.	ver. 11.
Period VII.
The seventh period concludes the whole prophecy, in the vision of a new heaven and a new earth, representing, in strong images, the extent, security, riches, and grandeur, of the heavenly Jerusalem; signifying the consummate happiness of the heavenly state.	XXI.
Thus the prophecies of this Revelation issue in an eternal Sabbath, the future reward of all who remain faithful and constant in the true religion of Jesus Christ.	XXII.
The Conclusion.
Confirms the truth and certainty of these prophecies; warns against corrupting; exhorts to hope for the accomplishment of them: an useful spirit and temper, to give good men consolation in all their present afflictions, and to preserve them from the corruptions of religion, how prevailing soever in their own times; which is,	ver. 6.
The useful Moral, and principal Doctrine, of all these Prophecies.

PRINCIPLES

Which, on carefully reading and studying the Sacred Writings, I think, I find unequivocally revealed there.

1. That there is but one uncreated, unoriginated, infinite, and eternal Being; the Creator, Preserver, and Governor, of all things.

2. That there is in this Infinite Essence a plurality of what are commonly called Persons, not separately subsisting, but essentially belonging to the Godhead; which Persons are commonly termed Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; or God, the Logos, and the Holy Spirit: and these are generally named the Trinity; which term, though not found in the New Testament, seems properly enough applied, as we never read of more than three Persons in the Godhead.

3. That the Sacred Scriptures, or Holy Books which form the Old and New Testaments, contain a full revelation of the will of God, in reference to man; and are alone sufficient for every thing relative to the faith and practice of a Christian; and were given by the inspiration of God.

4. That man was created in righteousness and true holiness, without any moral imperfection, or any kind of propensity to sin; but free to stand or fall.

5. That he fell from this state, became morally corrupt in his nature, and transmitted his moral defilement to all his posterity.

6. That, to counteract the evil principle, and bring man into a salvable state, God, from His infinite love, formed the purpose of redeeming man from his lost estate by Christ Jesus, and, in the interim, sent His Holy Spirit to enlighten, strive with, and convince men of sin, righteousness, and judgment.

7. That, in due time, the Divine Logos, called afterward Jesus the Christ, the Son of God, the Saviour, &c., became incarnated, and sojourned among men, teaching the purest truth, and working the most stupendous and beneficent miracles.

8. That this Divine Person, foretold by the prophets, and described by evangelists and apostles, is really and properly God; having, by the inspired writers, assigned to Him every attribute essential to the Deity; being one with Him who is called God, Jehovah, &c.

9. That He is also perfect man, in consequence of His incarnation; and in that Man, or manhood, dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; so that His nature is twofold, Divine and human; or God manifested in the flesh.

10. That His human nature is derived from the blessed Virgin Mary, through the creative energy of the Holy Ghost; but His Divine Nature, because God, infinite and eternal, is uncreated, underived, and unbegotten; which, were it otherwise, He could not be God in any proper sense of the word; but as He is GOD, the doctrine of the eternal Sonship must be false.

11. That as He took upon Him the nature of man, He died for the whole human race, without respect of persons; equally for all, and for every man.

12. That, on the third day after His crucifixion and burial, He rose from the dead; and, after showing Himself many days to His disciples and others, He ascended to heaven, where, as God manifest in the flesh, He continues, and shall continue, to be the Mediator of the human race, till the consummation of all things.

13. That there is no salvation but through Him; and that, throughout the Scriptures, His passion and death are considered as sacrificial; pardon and salvation being obtained by the shedding of His blood.

14. That no human being, since the fall, either has or can have merit or worthiness of or by himself; and therefore has nothing to claim from God, but in the way of His mercy through Christ: therefore, pardon, and every other blessing promised in the gospel, have been purchased by His sacrificial death; and are given to men not on account of any thing they have done or suffered, or can do or suffer, but for His sake, or through His merit alone.

15. That these blessings are received by faith, because not of works, nor of sufferings.

16. That the power to believe, or grace of faith, is the free gift of God; without which none can believe: but that the act of faith, or actually believing, is the act of the soul, under the influence of that power. But, this power to believe, like all other gifts of God, may be slighted, not used, or misused; in consequence of which is that declaration, "He that believeth shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

17. That justification, or the pardon of sin, is an instantaneous act of God's infinite mercy, in behalf of a penitent soul, trusting only in the merits of Jesus Christ: that this act is absolute in respect of all past sin; all being forgiven, where any is forgiven.

18. That the souls of all believers may be purified from all sin in this life: and that a man may live under the continual influence of the grace of Christ, without sinning against his God; all evil tempers and sinful propensities being destroyed, and his heart filled with pure love both to God and man.

19. That unless a believer live and walk in the spirit of obedience, he will fall from the grace of God, and forfeit all his Christian privileges and rights: in which state of backsliding he may persevere; and, if so, perish everlastingly.

20. That the whole period of human life is a state of probation; in every part of which a sinner may repent and turn to God; and in every part of it a believer may give way to sin and fall from grace: and that this possibility of rising, and liability to falling, are essential to a state of trial or probation.

21. That all the promises and threatenings of the word of God are conditional, as they regard man in reference to his being here and hereafter: and that on this ground alone the Sacred Writings can be consistently interpreted, or rightly understood.

22. That man is a free agent, never being impelled by any necessitating influence either to do evil or good; but has it continually in his power to choose the life or death that is set before him: on which ground he is an accountable being, and answerable for his own actions: and on this ground also, he is alone capable of being rewarded or punished.

23. That his free will is a necessary constituent of his rational soul; without which man must be a mere machine. either the sport of blind chance, or the mere patient of an irresistible necessity; and, consequently, not accountable for any acts to which he was irresistibly impelled.

24. That every human being has this freedom of will, with a sufficiency of light and power to direct its operations: and that this powerful light is not inherent in any man's nature; but is graciously bestowed by Him who is the true Light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world.

25. That as Christ has made, by His once offering Himself upon the cross, a sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction, for the sins of the whole world; and that, as His gracious Spirit strives with and enlightens all men, thus putting them in a salvable state; therefore every human soul may be saved, if it be not his own fault.

26. That Jesus Christ has instituted, and commanded to be perpetuated in His church, two sacraments: baptism, (sprinkling, washing with, or immersion in, water,) in the name of the Holy and ever-blessed Trinity, as a sign of the cleansing and regenerating influences of the Holy Ghost, producing a death unto sin, and a new birth unto righteousness; and the Eucharist, or Lord's Supper, as commemorating the sacrificial death of Christ. That by the first once administered, every person may be initiated into the visible church; and by the second, frequently administered, all believers may be kept in mind of the foundation on which their salvation is built; and receive grace to enable them to adorn the doctrine of God their Saviour in all things.

27. That the soul is immaterial and immortal, and can subsist independently of the body.

28. That there will be a general resurrection of the dead; both of the just and unjust: that the souls of both shall be reunited to their respective bodies; and that both will be immortal, and live eternally.

29. That there will be a day of judgment, after which all shall be punished or rewarded, according to the deeds done in the body: the wicked being sent to hell, and the righteous taken into heaven.

30. That these states of rewards and punishment shall have no end; forasmuch as the time of probation or trial is for ever terminated; and the succeeding state must necessarily be fixed and unalterable.

31. That the origin of human salvation is found in the infinite philanthropy of God: and that, on this principle, the unconditional reprobation of any soul is absolutely impossible.

32. The SACRED WRITINGS are a system of pure unsophisticated reason, proceeding from the immaculate mind of God: in many places, it is true, vastly elevated beyond what the reason of man could have devised or found out; but in no case contrary to human reason. They are addressed not to the passions, but to the reason, of man; every command is urged with reasons of obedience; and every promise and threatening founded on the most evident reason and propriety. The whole, therefore, are to be rationally understood, and rationally interpreted. He who would discharge reason from this, its noblest province, is a friend in his heart to the antichristian maxim, "Ignorance is the mother of devotion." Revelation and reason go hand in hand: faith is the servant of the former, and the friend of the latter: while the Spirit of God, which gave the revelation, improves and exalts reason, and gives energy and effect to faith.

To conclude, the doctrines or principles which I have stated above, and defended in this Work, I believe to be the truths of God. Those against which I have argued, I believe to be either false or unproved. The doctrine which cannot stand the test of rational investigation, cannot be true. The doctrines or principles already enumerated, have stood this test: and those which shrink from such a test, are not doctrines of Divine Revelation. We have gone too far when we have said, "such and such doctrines should not be subjected to rational investigation, being doctrines of pure revelation." I know no such doctrine in the Bible. The doctrines of this Book are doctrines of eternal reason: and they are revealed, because they are such. Human reason could not have found them out; but, when revealed, reason can both apprehend and comprehend them. It sees their perfect harmony among themselves; their agreement with the perfections of the Divine Nature, and their sovereign suitableness to the nature and state of man: thus reason approves and applauds. Some men, it is true, cannot reason: and, therefore, they declaim against reason, and proscribe it in the examination of religious truth. Were all the nation of this mind, Mother Church might soon reassume her ascendancy, and "feed us with Latin masses and a wafer god."

Men may incorporate their doctrines in creeds or articles of faith, and sing them in hymns; and this may be all both useful and edifying, if the doctrine be true: but in every question which involves the eternal interests of man, the Holy Scriptures must be appealed to, in union with reason, their great commentator. He who forms his creed or confession of faith without these, may believe any thing or nothing, as the cunning of others, or his own caprices, may dictate. Human creeds and confessions of faith have been often put in the place of the Bible, to the disgrace both of revelation and reason. Let those go away: let these be retained, whatever be the consequence. Fiat justitia: ruat cœlum.

No man either can or should believe a doctrine that contradicts reason: but he may safely credit (in any thing that concerns the Nature of God) what is above his reason: and even this may be a reason why he should believe it. I cannot comprehend the Divine Nature, therefore I adore it: if I could comprehend, I could not adore; forasmuch as the nature or being which can be comprehended by my mind, must be less than that by which it is comprehended, and therefore unworthy of its homage. The more knowledge increases, the more we shall see that reason and learning, sanctified by piety towards God, are the best interpreters of the Sacred Oracles.

O Thou, who dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth! and in Thy light we shall see light.

I have but two words more to add at the conclusion of this long and severe work: one concerning myself,

Ωσπερ ξενοι χαιροντες ιδειν πατριδα γαιαν,
Ουτως δε οι γραφοντες ιδειν Βιβλιου τελος.

Like travellers, when they see their native soil,
Writers rejoice to terminate their toil. T. GREEN.

And one to my Readers,

Hic labor extremus, longarum hæc meta viarum:
Hinc me digressum, vestris DEUS appulit oris.

My latest labour's end at length is gained,
My longest journey's welcome goal obtained,
By GOD's assistance has the work been wrought,
By His direction to your dwellings brought. T. GREEN.

DIRECTIONS TO THE BINDER.

The New Testament to be bound in Two Volumes, viz.

Vol. I.—To contain the four Gospels, Acts of the Apostles, and Epistle to the Romans.

Vol. II.—To contain from the beginning of I. Corinthians to the end of the New Testament.

N. B. The Introduction to the Four Gospels, which was published with the Acts of the Apostles, to be placed at the beginning of Vol. I. to precede the Gospel of St. Matthew. The Map of St. Paul's Voyages to follow the Acts of the Apostles.

The Binder is requested also to take notice, that through a mistake the Book of the Acts begins with the same signature as The Gospel of St. John, viz. 3 X.

It will be best not to bind the Work until six months after the last Part has been published.
